THE COTTON SUPPLY.

Extract from a letter published in the London Telegraph, June 16, from a special commissioner in Lancashire:

I persevere in abstaining from the expression of opinions, and the more since I observe those who are far better informed than I am are yielding to a natural impatience in committing themselves to opinions that are, in some instances, refuted within the week; while I see not a few really familiar with the subject, who are so intent upon one part of it that they forget all the rest, and suffer themselves to make mistakes which more ignorant persons can avoid. I will simply remind your readers, therefore, that a combination of various circumstances seems needed for the cultivation of cotton. Among them are certain qualities of soil not very easily defined; for you will observe that, quite recently, the most eminent chemists are throwing discredit upon the dogmatic value of chemical analysis in agriculture. Other needful circumstances are, a certain temperature of sun and great facilities for irrigation. Now these circumstances are combined in many parts of the world, but in very varying degrees. Australia was early pitched upon as a country in which cotton was likely to be naturalized. It has a splendid sun, in some places a good soil, and flatness of surface near the water both fresh and salt; but there appears to be a serious deficiency of the water itself, and we have yet to ascertain what is the breadth of land available for cotton plantations in Australia. Egypt is proverbial for combining the main requirements; it is actually sustaining one of our most important towns against the present crisis; and the extension of its culture seems to depend mainly upon the political tranquillity and progress of the community—another important consideration which cannot be left out of view.

Greece, and probably parts of Turkey, are worth attention; Brazil, Paraguay, and the West Indies the same; but it is manifest that from none of these quarters can we expect to derive any sudden supply to make good the deficiency from which we are suffering. The case of India has been so largely discussed that it is pretty well understood by most of your readers who are interested in the subject. It is now many years since American gentlemen were carried over for the express purpose of introducing American cotton and its mode of culture. Their arrival was regarded as an event in the economical history of India, and at first there were the strongest anticipations of success. The fact that all these years have elapsed with so little real progress exemplifies what I mean when I say that there is something else needed besides climate, soil, irrigation, and seed: you must have a community which can conduct its own industry; you must have working people who can see the impolicy of extravagant adulteration, or the policy at least of adulterating only to a moderate extent.

In other words, you must have amended institutions and usages; and if Rome was not built in a day," it is impossible that native Indians can be trained to European or American ideas within a year or within a generation. I am far from meaning to imply that, with the present situation, the culture of cotton could not be very rapidly extended and improved in India. I have yet to learn that the species of the plant which was the subject of my examination under its manufacture in Lancashire may not be superseded by a better variety. I know that there is all the capital in this country, all the intelligence in Lancashire as well as in America, and all the energy wherever Englishmen are to be found; but in India they have to apply themselves on an alien field, and they have at least some few years to work before we can look to any results commensurate with the amount of supplies that are just now withheld from us in America.

I am the more careful to recall these well known facts, because I observe that some part of them is almost systematically left out of sight, and among get the best-informed men of Lancashire I found two obvious conclusions most emphatically recognized. The first is that, if the American war should continue, no efforts will be able to screw from other sources any such supplies as to keep up the present rate of employment in our cotton districts. At present the mills and hands may roughly be said to have about half their old employment, at about five-twelfths of their old returns—though the income is far less for the mill-owners; but, even while I was there, the non-employment steadily increased, the stocks of cotton are steadily decreasing, and we have eighteen months before us. And then, in that season of cold, when food is more scarce, hunger more intolerable, there will probably be but half that half—employment upon which the people are half-starving already—perhaps even less.

It is necessary to keep this contingency in view while we watch the events which bear upon the second conclusion—that, even if the war were settled to-day, the cotton States of the broken Union could do very little to make good our deficiency of cotton for the remainder of the present year. It is possible that they might not be able to do so in 1863 or for some years to come; but, short of any wholly unforeseen disqualification, it appears most probable that they will send us in 1864 or 1865 more supplies than any other region which is likely to cultivate the plant. At all events, we must remain faithful to free trade, and this contingency will be kept in view by speculators in plantations elsewhere, whether in Africa, Asia, South America, or Australia; and the reaction will impose a certain temperance upon speculation in other quarters. But the general muster of facts also points to the advantage which Lancashire and its sister counties would gain through a speedy settlement of the American war; for in the first place they are likely to derive more efficient supplies from the old plantations than from any new ones within the same period; and if a settlement were accomplished, we should, at all events, approximately know the date at which the market in the raw material would be refurnished.

We should be able in some degree to measure the liabilities that we have to meet, and thus the ulterior question of remedies or aid would be considerably narrowed and proportionately facilitated.—There is, however, nothing in these facts which militates against an energetic cultivation of any or all other sources that can yield cotton for English manufacturers, but the contrary. Long before there was any talk of secession, several American friends of my own reported to me, what was confirmed when I visited their country, that there existed in the United States a numerous party desirous of seeing supplies brought to the English market from other quarters, on obvious grounds of policy. The calculation was this: From her soil, climate and nearness, in comparison with other great cotton countries, America is likely to have the preference in our market; but if England desired auxiliary supplies from other quarters, she would be able to extend her manufacturing machinery to its largest proportions; the market both for the raw material and for the manufactures would acquire a certain degree of steadiness; and thus the American grower would always have the preference in an extended and a steady market. The argument which is good for the Yankees is also good for John Bull.

We have, during the present calamity, discovered the misery of depending almost entirely upon one source. Although I doubt whether American cotton will ever be superseded, I am thoroughly convinced that, if we had called forth the natural capabilities which the Cotton Supply Association of Manchester has been so sagaciously desirous of cultivating, the blow would have been far less severe and the remedy easier. The fact that America will not disappear from our manufacturing system, therefore, is no reason why India, Egypt, Greece, Turkey, the Levant, Australia, the West Indies, Brazil, should not do for us all that they can. Any undue reliance upon supplies at once sufficient and prompt from novel quarters, might so cripple and break down the machinery of our manufacturing system as to impair even the prospects of those new plantations; whereas a speedy restoration of the American plant as the staple in our market would be the most direct mode of restoring our machinery to its working efficiency, with the utmost facility and inducement to encourage the growth of cotton in every possible variety under every possible climate.

REMOVAL OF CONFEDERATE PRISONERS.—Adjutant-General L. Thomas came to this city a day or two ago to make arrangements concerning the Confederate prisoners at Governor's Island and Fort Lafayette. After a thorough examination, it was found inexpedient to permit any considerable number of Secessionists to occupy Governor's Island. It is one of the largest ordnance depots in the United States. The arsenal on the Island contains millions of dollars' worth of war material; and as the different fortifications constitute a part of our harbor defences, and the armaments constantly ready for use, a comparatively small number of Secessionists, should the guard in any event be overpowered, could do a vast amount of damage. The prisoners numbered eleven hundred, and were taken to Fort Delaware.—New York Express.

A THREAT.—The Warren (Pa.) Mail gives an account of the sentencing of a woman, named Anna J. Clement, to the Penitentiary for two years, on a charge of larceny. During the remarks made by the Court she frequently interrupted with insolent and abusive language. When the sentence was pronounced, she broke forth with a volley of imprecations, and let fly four or five stones, one after another, like lightning. The Judges ducked their heads, and dodged, barely escaping a hit. Then she bounded like a wild cat for the Judges, and actually got partly behind the bench before she was seized and held, while she yelled and struggled with the strength of a strong man.

MILLARD FILLMORE—Treve and Talking.—A St. Louis gentleman, writing from Buffalo, says:—I had the pleasure of shaking hands with the Hon. Millard Fillmore, ex President. He did not hesitate to express his views upon the present state of affairs of our country. He is a conservative man. I give you his own words: "that the Abolitionists in Congress had undone what the army had done."

LATEST FROM KENTUCKY.

GEO. PEARSON, Esq. LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 17, 1862.
Dear Sir—I feel it a duty to express to you my sincere acknowledgements of the benefit derived from the use of a package of your MEDICATED TAR DROPS.
I was suffering with a SEVERE COUGH and SORE THROAT, when a friend presented me with a package of your celebrated TAR DROPS, and when I used them, I was free to confess it was more to gratify my appetite for sweetmeats than the idea of deriving any good from them; but really, the rapid allaying of the irritation and subsequent entire cure of the cough, induces me to thank you, and I take great pleasure in recommending to the public so effective a compound. Respectfully yours, J. E. SMITH, M. D., Assistant Surgeon Artillery Brigade U. S. A.
PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS are prepared and sold by GEO. PEARSON, No. 5 North Liberty street, Baltimore, at 10 cents per package. Sold also by all the principal Druggists. Jc21-tf
