SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1862.

THE COTTON FAMINE.

From the London Daily News, July 25.

The debate in the House of Commons last night, on the second reading of Mr. Villiers' Union Relief bill, reflects pretty accurately the state of feeling that prevails, not only throughout the country, but in the districts particularly affected. Almost all the speakers agreed in recognizing the exceptional nature and vast proportions of the calamity that has befallen these districts, the magnitude of the actual and prospective distress to be relieved, and the necessity for some special legislative provision to meet the exigencies of the crisis. Indeed, the only exception to this unanimity of sentiment was the speech of the honorable member for Kilmarnock.

Mr. Buverie is apparently still unable to see anything exceptional or extraordinary in the present or impending distress of the manufacturing districts, and while he does not venture to oppose the bill, he persists in thinking it unnecessary. Mr. Henley's speech, it is true, betrayed a leaning towards a similar view, but the right honorable gentleman did not deny the exceptional nature of the crisis, or go the length of deprecating any special legislative provision to meet its requirements. How, in the face of the facts, any one can take this view, we do not understand. Nearly a hundred thousand operatives, who a few months ago were in full work, are now altogether out of employment, while three times that number are working at less than half time, at wages that are altogether insufficient to support themselves and their families. In the more populous town the numbers already thrown on the rates are so large that the burden cannot be much further increased without creating a new class of paupers.

Yet it is quite certain that in the course of a few weeks at most, the large number already dependent on legal relief will be greatly and perhaps suddenly augmented. Mr. Villiers showed on Tuesday evening that the number of operatives at present receiving relief from the rates affords no evidence whatever of the number who are actually out of employment. In the case of Burnley, for example, there are no less than 10,000 operatives out of employment who are not receiving any parish relief. They have supported themselves from their small hoards in the savings banks and other sources, most of which are now exhausted. A vast number of this large class must in a short time be dependent on legal relief, in the parishes where the existing means of affording that relief are already taxed to the uttermost. It is clear, therefore, that special powers are needed to meet the impending emergency, and the House of Commons last night recognized this necessity by reading a second time the bill which is designed to meet it.

A Liverpool "Cotton Broker" writes to the Times as follows about the prospective cotton crop:

Last week, in your columns, it was stated that private telegrams had been received from Bombay advising a further shipment of 115,000 bales of cotton in one week to this country, and that it was expected that when the advices would be received hence of the late important rise in prices, that still further extensive shipments would be immediately made.

Now, as I am assured you will be glad to correct any error which may inadvertently be inserted in your columns, I take the liberty of stating that the Bombay letters and circulars by this same mail have to-day been received, and instead of 115,000 bales stated to be shipped in one week, it appears that only 28,000 bales were shipped in two weeks ending on that date against 72,000 bales during the same period last year, and that only about 85,000 bales were then in stock, and on shipboard; so that the monsoon in which either had, or was about setting, would almost prevent any cotton being received coastwise or from the interior until the beginning of October, so that it was quite improbable that over 100,000 bales more could be shipped in sufficient time to arrive here before the close of the present year.

Thus the prospective supply from India for the remainder of this year will be no greater than we received during the same period last year. Then we received 495,200 bales of East India cotton, while this year, with the cotton now afloat, and the probable quantity yet to be shipped to arrive before the 31st of December, the quantity will barely exceed that amount.

You will, therefore, perceive how critical is our present position, and how necessary it is that every effort should be made to stimulate the bringing down of cotton to the ports of India, so as to admit of immediate shipment, for after a period of ten months, during which the spinners and manufacturers of Europe have been working "full-time," the supply of cotton on hand, and that on the way, is still miserably small, and quite incompatible with the necessities of the world, as the following figures will show:

PRESENT VISIBLE STOCKS IN EUROPE, AND AMERICAN AND EAST INDIAN AT SEA.

	1862.	1861.
Great Britain	180,000	1,150,000
France	40,000	320,000
Germany	5,000	75,000
Russia	5,000	40,000
Spain	1,500	10,000
Italy	1,500	15,000
Total	213,000	1,610,000
In spinners hands	50,000	18,000
American	...	30,000
East Indian	402,000	591,000
Total supply	665,000	2,511,000

Thus the stock now on hand in Europe, and of East Indian and American to arrive by the end of October, is only 665,000 bales, against 2,511,000 at the same period last year. Such a comparatively small supply for the next three months will naturally strike those who may even not be conversant with the trade how critical is our position at the present moment, and how necessary it is that renewed efforts should be made to obtain from India, now our only hope, as large a proportion as possible of the supply of cotton which Europe now requires to meet the consumption of cotton goods going on.

THE NORTH AND THE WAR.

From the London Star, July 25.

A time must arrive when one or other of the combatants will weary of a struggle in which life and property are being consumed at a fearful rate. We have assumed that things may remain substantially as they are for the next six or eight weeks. Beyond that we see no hope of suspense or repose. The glories of the Indian summer, the autumn of the Western world, will be dimmed by clouds of cannon smoke, and the ingathered harvest will release tens of thousands of hardy reapers for the field from which death sweeps with his scythe the most precious growth of nations. In that season of more decisive conflict who will be the victor?

Again, we say, consider not with whom rest the right, who can better plead the warrant of justice and necessity for deeds of desolation? Hushed be the suggestions of political conviction or sympathy! Put nothing into the scale of judgment but the material facts by which material issues are decided. War is a struggle of physical forces. The census tables are the bases of the army roll. The twenty millions that may be on one side are four times the five millions on the other. Yet may there be a compensating force to which numbers give no expression. The people of the thirteen colonies were but three or four millions, but they prevailed against the fleets and armies of the mother country with her twelve millions.

It is difficult to outnumber an army on its own soil. The North must put forth its strength if it would overcome the weaker South. The spirit in which the conflict is conducted will decide the claim to victory. And of that spirit we shall presently learn more than we have hitherto known. Hitherto, the battle has been for the Union as it was. Henceforth, we suspect, it will be for the Union as it ought to be—for equal laws and liberties across the vast expanse of State and Territory for white men and for black.

REGIMENTS FROM WASHINGTON.

ARMING THE NEW LEVIES—THE GOVERNMENT AND THE MORGAN QUESTION.

From the Regular Correspondent of the New York Evening Post.

WASHINGTON, August 6.—Ohio District has sent two regiments to the war, but they were raised with great difficulty. The cause is obvious enough. Almost all the able-bodied here are in the employment of the Government, or at least a large proportion of them are, and they are exempt by that fact from military service. There is talk, however, of raising three or four more regiments. It is simply ridiculous. It would take every man liable to military duty from the District. If, through the enthusiasm caused by the meeting to-night and the bounties offered by the city government, a single regiment can be raised, the District will have done as well in proportion to the number of its actual "militia" as any other part of the country. It has been proposed in certain quarters that government officers be obliged to take their chances under the draft, and be compelled to procure substitutes or resign their places. There is certainly no good reason why those persons who have been lucky enough to obtain an office under the Government should thereby be exempted from the chances of military service.

THE NEW LEVIES.

The arrival of Governor Morgan and Thurlow Weed last night was noted by the newsmongers as an important event, and it was set down as having some connection with the new orders for drafting. Governor Morgan states his opinions on the subject, I hear, without concealment. He thinks New York will furnish her full quota without a resort to a draft. The reports received daily at the War Department are very encouraging. Troops are pouring in from all the States, and more will be in camp next week than the Government can properly arm. The War Department has, however, made the necessary arrangements to secure a full supply of arms, and long before the new levies can be drilled so as to be of actual service good arms will be procured. Meantime the inferior muskets in the country, of which there are many thousands, can be used in the camps of instruction.

The damage to persons by the Commodore Perry collapsing a flue, on Saturday evening, at Louisville, Kentucky, is less than was supposed. All the women and children were saved. Number of firemen lost, three; hands badly scalded two, whereof one may die. There were 500 bales of cotton aboard, most of which was burned. The boat is nearly a total loss.
