THE EVIL INFLUENCES OF SLAVERY UPON KENTUCKY.

Kentucky gets along very slowly in conning the lessons of it is great conflict, for she, too, like our neighbor, Delaware, touch d by the same evil influences growing out of slavery, has rejected the recent amendment by Congress to the Constitution abolishing it. We say she learns slowly, because it would seem that notwithstanding the fact that her soil has been stained all over with the blood of her children doing battle because of slavery, she still insists in clinging to it, defending it, and in taking her stand, to that extent, on the side of those who have attempted to destroy free government in its interests. Rent asunder—as it were—by the presence of this terrible agent, divided against herself as if torn by evil spirits, not a mail arrives thence that does not chronicle the most frightful murders, outrages of citizen upon citizen, crimes so frequent and so hideous in their singular atrocity, that the legends of "the dark and bloody ground" of Indian raids and butcheries in the olden time, pale before the horrible array.

And the worst of it appears to be, that these terrors and outrages increase, after it is plainly demonstrated that so far as the results of the great conflict are concerned, the condition of Kentucky is fixed: fixed as completely as is that of Maryland or any other of the States that have taken their stand on the side of the Government. And there is something that approaches the awfully mysterious, in the influence that can yet make her shut her eyes to facts and results, plain it would seem to all the rest of the world, that slavery having destroyed itself by its own madness, little is left for any to do but to bury it away out of the sight of men.

We repeat it, Kentucky learns but slowly, since not only has the war taught her little of what is for her peace and permanent good, but she has even abjured the sentiments largely entertained, the advance made nearly a score of years ago. Taking the views of leading men there as some evidence of what had been achieved in estimating her true interests, recurring to movements had in her Legislature as far back as eighteen hundred and fifty, and her movements have been rather retrograde than otherwise, and she has thus—we say once more—learned little from the terrible lessons of the war.

And to prove that this is so, we need only quote from an article in the Louisville Journal, of February, 1849, that print which at a later period abjuring its old positions to become the special champion of slavery and the rebellion, went through a series of ignominious flights, to perish at last, we believe, somewhere in Tennessee. At that period—1849—there had been sundry movements in the Kentucky Legislature looking to emancipation and although they failed, they looked promising enough, it appears, to call forth the following from the print in question:

"Emancipation is not dead in Kentucky, nor is it likely to die. Such principles as it has never die, nor can they be killed. Nor do its enemies believe for a moment that it is dead. If they believed so, they would not fear to submit the question to the people themselves for a direct decision. We have the curious spectacle, then, of a party in Kentucky, trembling every time that question moves. They know better than to trust themselves thus to the choice of the people. They prefer bragging, clamor, noise, confusion, and proclamation of the death of what they dare not meet in open encounter. This is their wisdom and perhaps their best policy."

"We prefer, as Mr. Guthrie did, in his great speech in answer to Robert Wickliffe, that slavery should be a living Kentucky, or never shall it be buried in the bosom of the S. A. The spirit of renovation is alive and in vigor, and must go forward in its onward march. We are decidedly in favor of emancipating Kentucky from the incubus that has weighed her down for many years, and from the awful dangers that threaten her more strongly now, than they did when Mr. Guthrie so clearly and triumphantly pointed them out in the debate to which we have referred."

Now who would suppose that these brave words found currency in Kentucky as far back as 1849,—some sixteen years ago,—and is it not clear that notwithstanding the terrible experiences of the intervening period, that in one sense, Kentucky has made no advance. And yet, there is a place to day, where slavery is nearer extinction—positively! Her Governor admits its uselessness, the fact that as an institution it is done for, but with all this plain, the marvel is witnessed of a lack of power to deal with its remains, to rid the State of that which is only proving the direst curse in causing the extremest ruin, the continuous bloodshed of its citizens.

In view of all this, Maryland has cause again and again to congratulate herself on her marked good fortune in being rid forever of so terrible an agent of discord, of damage to her best interests. Looking at the present condition of Kentucky, how much more wisely has Maryland acted, in grappling at the first possible chance afforded to do so, with an evil so eminently calculated to divide her people, to turn the hand of citizen against citizen in deadly and continuous conflict. And yet, had certain persons here had their way, had all been content to permit slavery to keep its forces together, to marshal them under the "gradual emancipation" policy for a longer conflict, there is no knowing now, when we should have been rid of our troubles, or when we should fairly have been launched on a more fortunate career.

The war has demonstrated a degree of vitality in slavery no one believed it possessed. But as its case has been for two or three years past, facts demonstrate that there are yet numbers in the country, who still believe that behind and beyond all these desperate conflicts, it has yet in some portions of the country a future.—This idea must be rooted out. The demonstrated cause of all our troubles—and the struggle and the evils upon Kentucky at present demonstrate its horrible influence—it must receive no quarter in these closing contests, from any friend of his country, from any lover of his race—Fortunate as we have been in Maryland, we should lend our influence to the sweeping tide of public sentiment accumulating every where to doom it to destruction; and desperate as may be its struggle, it cannot be long before its end will be pronounced amidst the acclamations of the world of enlightened humanity.

☞ The Boston Courier says: Joseph Bent, the Portuguese, convicted of murder, and sentenced to be hanged, was committed to the state Prison on Friday noon. The President's warrant commuting the death sentence to imprisonment for life, reached the city but an hour or two previous to that fixed for the execution. Upon the fact of the commutation being announced to him, the prisoner refused to accept it, insisting that he would rather go to prison, preferring death by hanging to imprisonment for life.

HOMOEPATHIC MEDICINES.

Humphrey's Homopathic Specifics had their origin in a great public want—medicines for all the needs of life. Children that father, mother, nurse or traveler, could always have by them, and always rely upon—so simple that mistake can not be made in the selection—so harmless that all may use them with impunity—and so efficient that all may rely upon them with safety. Such they have proved. Thousands of families use them daily for all the ills and ailments of every day life, and rarely are seriously sick or have need to call a physician.

Thousands, with some single specifics have cured themselves of serious chronic diseases of years standing, and upon which they have spent hundreds in vain, and among the millions who use them, none question their purity or efficacy.

The Sambucus aspect Portugal is now cultivated in this country for the preparation of a Wine more celebrated for the virtues of the fruit juice, than any other grape cultivated in the medicinal properties, flavor and brilliancy of color. The fruit has been brought to perfection here, and is cultivated by Mr. A. Speer in his vineyard, New Jersey. Physicians say it is superior to port or sherry, and in summer it is more agreable and refreshing than claret. Clergymen use it for Holy Communion wine, while the most fashionable families drink it as a dinner wine. Some of our druggists keep it.—N. Y. Tribune.

Has No'ore an antidote for acquired diseases? All who suffer believe that they ought to and can be cured. The Plantation Bitters prepared by Dr Drake, of New York, have no doubt benefited and cured more persons of Dyspepsia, Nervousness, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Sinking Weakness, General Debility and Nervous Depressions, than any other article in existence. They are composed of the purest roots and herbs, carefully prepared, to be taken as a tonic and gentle stimulant. They are adapted to any age or condition of life, and are extensively popular with mothers and persons of sedentary habits.

To Consumptives.
