The first reports received yesterday of these important transactions, carried with them a great drawback in killed and wounded; a circumstance which we are happy to find is not confirmed by official authority.

Letters from the army add, that the English floating battery was cannonading Dankirk.

This morning accounts were received by government, of an action having taken place before Dunkirk, after Sir James Murray's last dispatch had been written, in which the allied army had 16 killed and 57 wounded. Among the number of killed are general

D'Alton and colonel Eld. Among the wounded is captain Williams.

> PHILADELPHIA, October 26. The objects of the combined powers now leagued against France, appear to be as follow:--

The English and Spanish fleets to invest the French sea-ports in the Mediterranean, to attract the attention of the republic to that quarter, and to affift the Sardinians in recovering their country, and in entering France.

The Spaniards crossing the Pyrenees, are to penetrate into France, and by capturing the fortified places, to establish a cordon of posts sufficient to prevent the introduction of French principles into Spain; as well might they strive to prevent the northerly wind bloquing into Spain] and to allist in the re-establishment of the refractory priests-The sleet under lord Howe is sent to land a force in Brittany, to assist the rebels, English to attack Dunkirk. This is the work said to be cut out for the present campaign; whether the French will not spoil the fashion of the suit, is yet in the womb of time; and cannot be developed under a number of weeks.

Some London papers mention the capture of Dunkirk by the English, with the loss of 150 sail of vessels in the harbour, captured or destroyed. Other English papers as late as August 12, mention it only as an event that might probably in a few weeks take

GEORGE WASHINGTON. By the President, THOMAS | EFFERSON.

New York, October 27, 1793, 2d year of the French republic. CITIZEN GENET, minister plemipotentiary of the French republic, to MR. JEFFERSON, Secretary of itate.

I have just received, together with your letter of the third instant, the dismission of citizen Duplaine, vice-conful at Boston, and I hasten to declare to you, that I do not acknowledge its validity, because the constitution of the United States has not given the president the right which he now appears desirous to exercise—it has empowered him, as first uninister of if any are left unconquered. The Prussians are to the American people, to admit and receive the minis-The commandant of Grenville is under an arrest, enter Alface and Lorraine: The Austrians to march ters of foreign nations, fent to the great American for having refused to publish the decree against Wimp- in the duke of Brunswick's tract to Paris, and the consederation, and their consulary agents, distributed to the particular states; but, in confiding to him this official function, it has not given him the power of discharging them, to send thom away, or to suspend them when once they have been admitted. Such an authority cannot be exerted, Sir, but by the sovereign of the agent, or by the one to which he is fent. On the part of their own fovereign, their recall can only be the object of his particular will, or a consequence of negotiations began with him for that object: On the part of the inversign to whom he is fent, a d fmission can be the result only of an act of regular justice, or of an arbitary act. -If it is a national act of justice, the sovereign should be furnished with every possible light upon so important an object, that he may be enabled to prove to the foreign sovereign, that the minister was unworthy of his confidence, and, that the dismission or suspension was inculpensable -If it is an act merely arbitrary, it is among the class of acts of aggression, and becomes a cause of war. for the evidence or authority, upon which they would and you know. Sir, that in this respect the constitution of the United States has referred, to the representatives of the people, the right of declaring it. I do not recollect what the worm-eaten writings of Grotius, Puffendorf, and Vattel, fay on this subject -I thank God I have forgot what these hired juritprudifis have written upon the rights of nations, at a period when they were all enchained. But the fundamental points of your liberty, and our own, are engraved in my memory in characters not to be effaced, and the rights of man are enclosed in my breast with the source of life. I have incessantly before my eyes your constitution, and our own, and it is because I fully feel the just and wife intentions of those who founded them, that I demand of you, Sir, to ask the president of the United States to procure an examination, by the legislature, representing the sovereign people of Massachusetts, of the conduct of citizen Duplaine, in the same manner as I have demanded an examination of my own in the enfuing congress.

In governments like ours, political affairs can only belongs, in the first instance, and it is for her officers to announce it to the federal government, in order that the foreign agent, found to have violated the laws vereign if he merits it. I infult, with the more confidence upon this step, Sir, as the attorney for the to be found at the circuit court, against cirizen Duplaine, and three times a popular and virtuous jury threw out his complaint, and this vice-conful was How could, in fact, any room for accusation against Given under my hand this tenth day of October, him be found, fince he only acted in conformity to the treaties, to his instructions, to the decisions of the federal government, communicated to all flates, which even trust to the care of the French conful the prizes supposed to be made within the jurisdiction of the United States, and as he proved, incontestibly, that he never had any intention of relifting, by force, the
