ODE TO EVENING.

HAIL, meek-eyed maiden, clad in sober grey,
Whose soft approach the weary woodman loves,
As homeward bent, to kiss his prattling babes,
Jocund, he whistles thro' the twilight groves!
When Phœbus sinks behind the gilded hills,
You lightly o'er the misty meadows walk,
The drooping daffies bathe in dulcet dews,
And tulle the nodding violet's tender stalk.
The panting Dryads, that in day's fierce heat
To inmost bowers and cooling caverns ran,
Return to trip in wanton evening dance;
Old Sylvan, too, returns; and laughing Pan,
To the deep woods the clam'rous reeds repair;
Light skims the swallow o'er the wat'ry scene!
And from the steep boat and fresh furrow'd field
Stout ploughmen meet, to trundle on the green.
The swain that artless sings on yonder rock,
His supping sheep and length'ning shadow spies;
Pleas'd with the cool, the calm refreshing hour,
And with hoarse murm'ring of unnumber'd flies.
Now every passion sleeps: desponding Love,
And pining Envy, ever restless Pride;
And holy calm creeps o'er my peaceful soul;
Anger and mad Ambition's storms subside.
O modest Evening! oft let me appear
A wand'ring vot'ry in thy penfive train,
Lil'ning to every wildly warbling note
That fills with farewell sweet thy dark'ning plain.

SINGULAR INSANITY.

THE following anecdote is so singular, that tho' it is not without its parallel, both in ancient and modern times, it might be treated as a romance, were it not related on the authority of very respectable testimony—Madam de HASTER, a German lady who resides at Paris. "The enthusiasm of a girl from Provence has lately occupied my mind. It is a singular occurrence, which I shall never forget. I was present at the national museum, when this girl entered the Salle de Apollon—she was tall and elegantly formed, and in all the bloom of health. I was struck with her air, and my eyes involuntarily followed her steps. I saw her start as she cast her eyes on the statue of Apollo, and stood before it as if struck by lightning. Gradually her eyes sparkled with sensibility. She had before looked calmly around the hall. Her whole frame seemed to be electrified, as if a transformation had taken place within her, and it has since appeared that a transformation had indeed taken place, and that her youthful breast had imbibed a powerful, alas! fatal passion. I remarked, that her companion, (an elderly sister, it seems) could not force her to leave the statue but with much entreaty; and she left the hall with tears in her eyes, and all the expression of tender sorrow. I set out the very same evening for Montmorency.
I returned to Paris at the end of August, and visited immediately the magnificent collection of antiques. I recollected the girl from Provence, and tho' that I might perhaps meet with her again; but I never saw her afterwards, though I went frequently. At length I met with one of the attendants, who, I recollected, had observed her with the same attentive curiosity which I had felt, and I inquired after her. "Poor girl," said the old man, "that was a sad visit for her." She came almost every day afterwards to look at the statue, and she would sit still, with her hands folded in her lap, staring at the image; and when her friends forced her away, it was always with tears that she left the hall. In the middle of May she brought, whenever she came, a basket of flowers, and placed it on the mosaic steps. One morning early she contrived to get into the room before the usual hour of opening it, and we found her within the gate, sitting on the steps, almost fainting and exhausted. The hall was scented with the perfume of flowers, and she had elegantly thrown over the statue a large veil of India muslin, with golden fringe. We let no one into the hall till her friends carried her home. She struggled exceedingly when forced away, and declared that the god that night had chosen her to be his priestess, and that she must serve him. We have never seen her since, but hear that an opiate was given her, that she was taken into the country, and that she died raving."
