STANZAS.

MY early life was like the dream
That summer's morning breath inspires;
I thought my fun of bliss would beam,
And glow with undiminished fires.
But, ah! a raging storm, at last,
Came howling o'er life's tranquil sea,
And the foul's barque had well nigh cast
A wreck into eternity.
But He, who saw the impending ill,
God bade his Holy Spirit come;
And all the billowy wrath was still,
And every conscious wave was dumb.
So, when our Saviour str de the wave,
To shield his followers from despair;
To snatch them from a wat'ry grave,
And bring the oil of gladness there:
While all his NUMER stood confest,
The clamorous waters saw his nod!
And conscious of the high behest,
Bowed to the mandate of their God!

LONDON, JAN. 10.

Alarming reports are again in circulation relative to the state of our affairs in India. They would induce us to believe, that the whole of the native army on the Deccan establishment, was in a state of open rebellion, and that it had secured two strong positions, Hyderabad and Seringapatam. The king's troops, it is added, to the amount of 11,000 men had taken the field against the rebels. This regular force would be further increased by a corps from Ceylon, and two regiments from the Cape. Lord Minto had written to Calcutta, as we stated yesterday, to proceed to Madras, in order to confer and concert measures with sir George Barlow for the restoration of tranquillity. These reports, however, are greatly exaggerated—certainly we were not prepared to expect such intelligence, and the news we had received.

It was reported at Cadiz that there was a serious insurrection in the south of France, that the leaders of it had solicited Massena to become their commander in chief, and that this state of things was communicated to lord Collingwood, probably for the purpose of soliciting his aid in furthering new views.
