

From the Telegraph
A party of pick-pockets were looking over the contents of a pocket-book which they had stolen, and came across a letter which they proceeded to read. They had seen some passages in which their characters were handled pretty severely. They all exclaimed, "what a letter!" "that it was an insult to the whole club."
This actually occurred, not long ago, in this city. When I heard the exclamation, I could not but recollect the anecdote of the man who peeped over a gentleman's shoulder while he was writing a letter. The writer immediately closed his letter with this remark, "I will say more, but that a long letter is looking over my shoulder." "It is a damned lie," exclaimed the self convicted blunderer. I have not seen one word that he has written.

From the Baltimore Telegraph
A Case stated for the opinion of the Bar.
We will suppose that a trunk in the mail stage, should have been trunk stolen by an unknown hand. The perpetrator of this act is the object of all enquiry, and the trunk and contents are given up by the owner as irretrievably lost. We will suppose, that a man appears in public places, wearing an hat which was taken from the trunk in which the owner was written.
We will suppose that the man who claims his property, and asks the man how it came into his possession. He replies that he found it in a public highway. We ask, whether this would not, in the eyes of the law, make such a man responsible for every article of property contained in that trunk. We would ask, whether the detention of such property for a single hour, would not be such an individual libel for the whole. If this doctrine is true, a trunk is broke it is open, and the case of a pocket-book.
The Democrats are now repeatedly invited to publish every paper contained in the stolen pocket-book, because a very little more evidence will be wanting to lead to a detection and punishment. Let them ransack the papers in the possession, and find a few more that are so obnoxious to their cause, that they sealed, or unsealed, we will make no difference, and open them, until the pocket book is empty, we can but indulge the hope that a chimerical one that should be returned. We beg to do, if we have presumed too far upon democratic honesty, but the detention of the pocket book and papers for ten months, we suppose, would be a term sufficient for all purposes, whether electioneering or felonious. We show that they are acquainted with the contents of Mr. Harper's pocket book, and however patriotic they may be, they ought certainly to turn the envelope.

NEWBERN, (N. C.) Sept. 14.
DREADFUL STORM.
On Sunday night and Monday morning last, the town was visited by one of the most destructive gales, from the North East, experienced in this part of the country. The wind was most violent about 3 o'clock on Monday morning, and at day light the streets were whirled by the wind, and wharves presented a scene which beggars all description. The streets were rendered impassable by trees lying in every direction. Most of the small wooden buildings in the North East part of the town were carried away by the violence of the wind and waves—the tide having risen nearly two feet above common high water. The garden fences in many places were removed, and the standing posts entirely under water. Several vessels were on the wharves and in the streets, others on the marshes and some in the woods. On the South West of the town, several houses and stores were blown down by the mercy of the angry elements—their valuable contents many instances entirely lost, and who had property on the wharves sustained more or less injury. Water in many shops being from 7 feet above the ground level. Many succeeded on Saturday in removing a part of their property from the scene of danger, and the risk of their lives—others, however, from their lower to the wharves, but notwithstanding every exertion and precaution, the highly proportioned with great symmetry and strength, a small, round, and handsome foot. His countenance is sallow, and as it were deeply tinged by hot climates; but the most commanding air I ever saw. His eyes grey, and the most piercing that you can imagine. His glance, you fancy, searches into your inmost thoughts. His hair dark brown, and no appearance of grey. His features are handsome now, and when younger, he must have been a very handsome man. He is rather fat, and his belly protuberant, but he appears active notwithstanding. His step and demeanour altogether commanding. He looks about 45 or 46 years of age. In fact, he is very like the picture that is exhibited of him in the Adelphi, and also several of the prints. He is extremely curious, and never passes any thing remarkable in the ship without immediately demanding its use, and inquiring minutely into the manner thereof. He also stops and asks the officers divers questions relative to the time they have been in the service, what actions, &c. He dresses in green uniform, with red facings, and edged with red, two plain gold epaulettes, the lappels of the coat cut round and turned back, white waistcoat, and breeches, and military boots and spurs. The Grand cross of the Legion of Honour on his left breast. He professes his intention (if he is allowed to reside in England) to adopt the English customs and manners, and declares he will never meddle with politics more. The army which left Paris, and united with others on the Loire, wanted him to join them and resume his title, which he refused to do. He declares that not another "goutte de sang" shall be shed on his account. Fortunate indeed, it would have been if he really had been of this opinion some years back.

His followers still treat him with the greatest respect, not one of them, not even the Duke of Rovigo himself, ever speaking to him without being uncovered the whole time. He does not appear out until about half past ten though he rises about seven. He breakfasts in the French fashion at eleven and dines at six. He spends most of the day alone in the after cabin, and reads a great deal. He retires to bed about eight. He has not lately been much on the quarter deck. His suit is composed of about 50 persons.
Gen. Bertrand appears to be a fine and faithful soldier. He has never abandoned Napoleon in his adversity or prosperity. He was at Elba with him, and, I believe, intends accompanying him (if permitted) wherever his destination may be. It was this officer who constructed the bridge over the Danube, from the Isle de Lobau, which saved the French army after the battle of Asperne. Madame Bertrand, I believe, was born in Martiniq, of Irish parents, and her maiden name was Dillon. She is extremely pleasant and affable, and greatly attached to Napoleon's interests—The Duc de Rovigo is a very fine looking man, about 50, with a countenance expressive of superior talents. Le Lascases is a little fellow, about 5 feet 1 inch, very clever. He is the author of the Historical Atlas, which I suppose you have seen. L'Allemand is considered an excellent officer, and commanded the light Infantry of the Imperial Guard in the battle of Waterloo.

Further Particulars.
Since the above was put in type, we have been furnished by the coroner who attended, with the following additional particulars:—The quest report, that the circumstances and evidence before them indicate the deceased to have been a gentleman travelling, who was redged and dragged off the road or about the first of July last—but that period the cry of murder was heard in the direction several times at midnight; on the 6th a beaver hat, a few rods distant, a vest, and a pair of shoes, with a pair of remains was found a pair of trousers, short, and buttoned up the legs; and the parts of the shirt were fine and ruffled up the collar; his hair was dark brown. Our request above is added: that the coroner and others, that attenders of news papers will give notice this circumstance.
