The Compensation Bill.
From the Yankee, a democratic paper

The idea that the legislators should having business to transact in any of the public offices. Those who may be inclined to patronize the establishment, was their intention to provide a fair indemnity, of the expense involved, and for the high and dignified nature of the trust. Such a sum, at that time, would have commanded the first talents of the country as well as twice that sum now; because the value of money has greatly depreciated, the mode of living, common to all classes, become more expensive, and success in other avocations better rewarded. While the duties are found almost incompatible with other pursuits; while the intervals between the sessions, like intervals in the exercise of all other public trusts, in many of which they are equally great in proportion, should be passed in increasing their qualifications; it is apparent that they have hundred dollars a year, is any thing besides a just indemnity. To ask, indeed, an able man, to accept such employment, is to ask him to sacrifice his domestic attachments, and private interests, for the benefit of the public. If such a sacrifice were necessary, patriots might not shrink from the call; but no inability is alleged in the public, to afford a proper remuneration.

We are opposed then to the opinion that legislators should serve gratuitously, or without an adequate compensation, because it will give a preference to wealth over intelligence; and because it would hazard the independence of the legislature on the executive, and their dependence on the people. In a preference of rich men over talents, we lose the muscular power of democracy, degrade the character of our national assembly, and become the victims of ignorance. In precipitating the dispatch of public measures, we shall be sure to have some great interests neglected, and others improperly provided for. In making the legislature dependent on the executive we have a government where the feelings and sentiments of the nation are disregarded, where the principle of representation is impaired or destroyed; in short, where the democratic character is essentially and entirely wanting.
