MURDER.

It is now long since the public papers announced, that a female had been apprehended at Bremen on a charge of having committed murders of unparalleled atrocity. The slow progress made in criminal proceedings there, is so common through all Germany, has prevented her from being brought to trial and sentenced until lately. Our last papers from Europe contain the following account of the proceedings in the case of this woman.

Marguerite Timm received a tolerably good education, her father, a tailor at Bremen, lived in easy circumstances. In 1808, at the age of 20 years, she married one Mottenberg, a saddler, who also possessed some property. Seven children were the fruit of this marriage, three of them survived their father, at whose decease the widow found herself in possession of an ample fortune. In 1815, in the space of a few months after the decease of her husband, death also carried off her mother and her three remaining children. The following year her only brother also died, on his return home after a long absence, and when the property of the father was about to be divided.

In 1817, the widow entered into a second marriage with a Mr. Gottfried, with whom she, by her own confession, had carried on an illicit intercourse during the life of her first husband. Some days after the marriage, Gottfried died suddenly. Six years elapsed, and she was on the point of marrying a Mr. Zimmermann, when he was attacked by a severe illness, and died. In 1820, the widow sold her house to a Mr. Rumpf, a cartwright, retaining, however, one apartment in it, for her own use. Some months expired, and the wife of Rumpf died in childbirth, when the widow Gottfried took charge of the household of Rumpf. He was attacked from time to time with violent vomitings. On the 6th March, 1824, he perceived that a piece of bacon which had been cooked by the widow Gottfried, was covered with some strange substance. He caused it to be examined by his physician, who immediately declared that there was a large quantity of arsenic on it. On information given by the physician, the widow Gottfried was apprehended.

The police then received considerable information from different persons, in relation to the conduct of this woman. It was proved on the trial, and she confessed, that she had given arsenic to a number of persons, 15 of whom died in consequence, and seventeen others survived. On the trial, circumstances came out which justified a belief that she had given poison to other individuals, to whom it had not been fatal. In consequence of the number of murders proved against her, it was, however, thought necessary to go into an investigation of these cases.

The woman confessed that she was induced by motives of interest to commit some of these murders, but as to others, she could only attribute her conduct to an irresistible desire to give poison, and to see her victims perish. The counsel, in her defence, endeavoured to avail himself of this latter declaration, to show that she was labouring under monomania and in consequence, that there was no criminal intention. Medical men who were examined on this point, declared that they could discover in her no physical cause which could give rise to such a monomania, and the defence in consequence did not succeed. The following is the judgment given by the criminal court of Bremen, on the 17th September, 1830.

In the trial held on Marguerite Timm, widow of the late Michael Christopher Gottfried, accused of poisoning and of other crimes, the Court declares the widow Gottfried, (who has besides committed sundry thefts, acts of swindling and perjury, as well as attempted to cause abortion,) convicted and guilty—

1st. Of having assassinated, by means of poison, her father and mother, her three children, her first and second husband, her brother, her betrothed Paul Thomas Zimmermann, Mrs. Anne Lonia Meyerholz, Mrs. John Moses, the wife of the cooper, Christopher Schmidt, and lastly, the wife of the locksmith, Frederick Kleine, at Hanover; as also of having besides caused the death, by poison, of Miss Eliza Schmidt, daughter of the said Frederick Schmidt, which last act, however was not premeditated.

2d. Of having administered poison to the said John Christopher Rumpf, at diverse times, with the intention of killing him, after having by the same means destroyed his health.

3d. Of having administered poison to a great number of other individuals, with premeditation, but without intention to kill them, though it proved extremely pernicious to the health of those individuals.

In consequence, and conformably to the 150th article of the criminal code, the court condemns the widow Gottfried for the crimes she has committed, and as a useful warning to those who might be tempted to imitate her, to have her head cut off with the sword, and that the expenses of trial, judgment and execution, shall be defrayed from the property of the condemned person.

The execution of the widow Gottfried took place on the 21st April, 1831, on the Cathedral square, at Bremen. The Protestant clergyman who had attended her during her imprisonment only quitted her at the last moment. Her hair was cut off, and she was then clad in a white under dress, decorated with black ribbons. A white cap, with the same coloured ribbons was placed on her head. She showed the utmost resignation, and entered the fatal cart, which passed through a number of streets, with the greatest coolness; but when she reached the foot of the scaffold, she had hardly strength to descend from the cart.

An officer of justice here again read her sentence, and she was then placed in an armchair, and fled. She begged the executioner to cause her a little suffering as possible. He performed his office, and at one single blow separated her head from her body. There were more than 35,000 spectators to witness the execution.
