Answer to Dept's 284 Feb. 3 involves questions so intricate, so delicate, so strange to our ferm of thought, and so important to analysis of our international environment that I cannot compress answers into single brief message without yielding to what I feel would be dangerous degree of over-simplification (FROM EXEMAN). I hope, therefore, Dept will bear with me if I submit in answer to this question five parts, subjects of which will be roughly as follows:

(1) Basic features of post-war Soviet outlook. (2) Background of this outlook. (3) Its projection in practical policy on official level. (4) Pts projection on unofficial level. (5) Practical deductions from standpoint of UE policy.

I apologize in advance for this burdening of telegraphic channel; but questions involved are of such urgent importance, particularly in view of recent events, that our answers to them, if they deserve attention at all, seem to me to deserve it at once. There follows Part I:

Basic features of post-war Soviet outlook, as put forward by official propaganda machines, are as follows:

(A) USSR still lives in antagonistic "capitalist encirclement" with which in the long run there can be no permanent peaceful occasistence. As stated by Stalin in 1927 to a delegation of American workers: "In course of further development of international revolution there will emerge two centers of world significance: a socialist center, drawing to itself the countries which tend toward socialism, and a capitalist center, drawing to itself the countries that incline toward capitalism. Buttle between these two centers for command of world counces will decide fate of capitalism and of communics in entire world."

- (B) Capitalist world is beset with internal conflicts, inherent in nature of capitalist society. These conflicts are insoluble by means of posceful compromise. Greatest of them is that between England and US.
- (6) Internal coefficts of capitalism inevitably generate wars. Were thus generated may be of two kinds: intra-capitalist wars between two capitalist states, and wars of intervention against socialist world. Smart capitalists, vainly seeking escape from inner conflicts of capitalism, incline toward latter.
- (D) Intervention against USSB, while it would be disastrous to those who undertook it, would cause renewed delay in progress of Soviet socialism and must therefore be forestelled at all costs.
- (E) Conflicts between capitalist states, though likewise fraught with danger for USER, nevertheless hold out great possibilities for advancement of socialist cause, particularly if USER remains militarily powerful, idealogically monolithic and faithful to its present brilliant leadership.
- (F) It must be beene in mind that capitalist world is not all had. In addition to hopelessly reactionary and bourgeois elements, it includes (1) contain wholly emlightened and positive elements united in acceptable communistic parties and (2) contain other elements (now described for tactical reasons as progressive or democratic) whose reactions, aspirations and activities happen to be "objectifiedy" favorable to interests of USES. Those last must be encourage and utilized for Soviet purposes.
- (6) Among negative elements of bourgeois-capitalist society, most dangarous of all are those whom Lemin called false friends of the people, namely moderate-socialist of social-democratic leaders (in other words, non-communist left-wing). These are more dangerous than out-and-out reactioneries, for latter at least much under their true colors, whereas moderate left-wing landers confuse people by employing devices of socialism to serve interests of reactionery capital.

So much for premises. To what deductions do they lead from standpoint of Soviet policy? To following:

- (A) Everything must be done to advance relative strength of UNER as factor in international society. Conversely, no opportunity must be missed to reduce strength and influence, collectively as well as individually, of capitalist powers.
- (B) Soviet efforts, and those of Russia's friends abroad, must be filesoted toward despening and exploiting of differences and pomilious between capitalist powers. If these eventually despen in an "imperialist" war, this war must be turned into revolutionary upheavals within the various capitalist countries.
- (6) "Democratic-progressive" elements abroad are to be utilized to maximum to bring pressure to bear on capitalist governments along lines agreeable to Soviet interests.
- (D) Relentless battle must be waged against socialist and social-demogratic leaders shroad.

Part II. Background of autlook.

Before examining ramifications of this Party line in practice there are certain aspects of it to which I wish to draw attention.

First, it does not represent natural outlook of Russian people. Latter are, by and large, friendly to outside world, eager for experience of it, eager to measure against it telents they are conscious of possessing, eager above all to live in peace and enjoy fruits of their own labor. Farty line only represents thesis which official propaganda machine puts forward with great skill and percistence to a public often reservable resistant in the stronghold of its innermost thoughts. But party line is binding for outlook and conduct of people who make up apparatus of power - party, searet police and powerment - and it is evaluately with these that we have to deal.

Second, please note that presises on which this party line is based are for most part simply not true. Experience has shown that peaceful and mutually profitable coexistence of capitalist and socialist states is entirely possible. Basic internal conflicts in advanced countries are no longer primarily those arising out of capitalist ownership of means of production, but are once stricting from advanced urbanism and industrialism as such, which Russia has thus far been spared not by socialism but only by her can backwardness. Internal rivalries of capitalism do not always generate wars; and not all wars are attributable to this cause. To speak of possibility of intervention against HESR today, after elimination of Germany and Japan and after example of recent war, is shearest nonsense. If not provoked by forces of intolerance and subvertion "capitalist" world of today is quite capable of living at peace with itself and with Russia. Finally, no same person has reason to doubt sincerpity of moderate socialist leaders in vestern countries. Her is it fair to deny success of their effects to improve conditions for working population wherever, as in Scandinavia, they have been given chance to show what they could do.

ffalsaness of these premises, every one of which predates recent war, was amply demonstrated by that conflict itself. Anglo-American differences did not turn out to be major differences of western world. Capitalist countries, other than those of axis, showed no disposition to solve their differences by joining in cruesde against USE. Instead of imperialist war turning into civil wars and revolution, USER found itself obliged to fight side by side with capitalist powers for an arowed community of aims.

Nevertheless, all these theses, however baseless and disproven, are being boldly put forward again today.

What doos ...

What does this indicate: It indicates that Soviet party line is not based on any objective analysis of situation beyond Russia's borders; that it has, indeed, little to do with conditions outside of Russia; that it srises mainly from basic inner-Bussian necessities which existed before recent war and exist today.

At bottom of Bremlin's neurotic view of world affairs is traditional and instinctive Russian sense of insecurity. Originally, this was insecurity of a peachful agricultural people trying to live on wast exposed plain in neighborhood of fierce neurotic peoples. To this was added, as Bussia came into contact with secondically advanced west, fear of more competent, more powerful, more highly-organized societies in that area. But this latter type of insecurity was one which afflicted rather Russian rulers than Bussian people; for Russian rulers have invariable sensed that their ryle was relatively archaic in form, fragile and artificial in its psychological foundation, mable to stand comparison or contact with political systems of western countries. For this reason they have always feared foreign penetration, feared direct contact between western world and their own, feared what would happen if Russians learned truth about world without or if foreigners learned truth about world without or if foreigners learned truth about world within. And they have learned to seek seemity only in patient but deadly struggle for total destruction of rival power, never in compacts and compromises with it.

It was no coincidence that Marxiss, which had assoldered ineffectively for half a century in western Europe, caught hold and blased for first time in Bussia. Only in this land which had never known a friendly neighbor or indeed any tolerant equilibrium of separate powers, either internal or international, could a doctrine thrive which viewed economic conflicts of society as insoluble by peaceful means. After establishment of Bolahevist regime, Marxist dogma, rendered even more truculent and intolerant by Lenin's interpretation, became a perfect vehicle Mor messe of insecurity with which Bolaheviks, even more than previous Bussian rulers, were afflicted. In this dogma, with its basic altruism of purpose, they found justification for their instictive fear of outside world, for the dictatorship without which they did not know how to rule, for cruelties they did not dare not to inflict, for sacrifices they felt bound jto demand. In the name of Marxiam they sacrificed every single ethical value in their methods and tactics. Today they cannot dispense with it. It is fig leaf of their moral and intellectual respectability. Without it they would stand before history, at best, as only the last of that long succession of cruel and wasteful Russian rulers who have relentlessly forced bountry on to ever new heights of military power in order to guarantee external security of their internally weak regimes. This is why Soviet purposes must always be solemnly clothed in trappings of Marxiam, and why no one should underrate importance of dogma in Soviet affairs. Thus Soviet leaders are driven by necessaities of their own part and present position to put forward a dogma which portrays outside brould as evil, hostile and memoring, but me and bearing within itself germs of creeping disease and destined to be wracked brith growing internal convulsions until it is given final coup de grace by rising power of socialism and yields to new and better world. This thesis provides justification for that increase of military and police power of Russian state, for khat isolation of Russian population from outside world, and for that fluid and pometant pressure to extend limits of Russian police power which are together khenatural and instinctive urges of Russian rulers. Basicallythis is only the steady advance of uneasy Russian nationalism, a centuries-old movement in which conceptions of offense and defense are inerthicably confused. But in new guise of international Marxism, with its honeyed promises to a desperate and war-torn outside vorld, it is more dangerous and insidious than ever before.

It should not be thought from above that Soviet party line is necessarily disingenuous and insincere on part of all those who put it forward. Many of them are too ignorant of outside world and mentally too dependent to question it. Others have a rare gift of self-hypnotism, and have no difficulity making themselves believe what they find it comforting and convenient to believe. Finally we have the unsolved mystery as to who, if anyone, in this great land actually receives accurate and unbiased information about outside world. In atmosphere of oriental secretiveness and conspiracy which pervades this government, possibilities for distorting or poisoning sources and currents of information are infinite. The very disrespect of Russians for objective truth - indeed, their disbelief in its existence - leads them to view all stated facts as instruments for furtherance of one ulterior purpose or another. There is good reason to suspect that this government is actually a conspiracy within a conspiracy; and I for one am reluctant to believe that Stalin himself receives anything like an objective picture of outside world. Here there is ample scope for the type of subtle intrigue at which Russians are past masters. Inability of foreign governments to place their case squarely before Russian policy-makers - extent to which they are delivered up in their relations with Russia to good graces of obscure and unknown advisors when they never see and cannot influence - this to my mind is most disquisting feature of diplomacy in Moscow, and one which western statesman would do well to keep in mind if they would understand nature of difficulties encountered here.

Part III. Projection of Soviet outlook in practical policy on efficial level.

We have now seen nature and background of Soviet program. What may we expect by way of its practical implementation:

Soviet policy, as Dept implies in its query under reference, is conducted on two pinnes: (1) official plane represented by acticins undertaken officially in name of Soviet Covt; and (2) subterranean plane of actions undertaken by agencies for which Soviet Covt does not admit responsibility.

Policy promulgated on both planes will be calculated to serve basic palicies A to D outlined in Part I. Actions taken on different planes will differ considerably, but will devetail into each other in purpose, timing and effect.

On official plane we must look for following:

(A) Internal...

- (A) Internal policy devoted to increasing in every way strength and prestige of Soviet state: intensive military-industrialisation; maximum development of armed forces; great displays to impress outsiders; continued secretiveness about internal matters, designed to conceal weaknesses and to keep opponents in dark.
- (B) Wherever it is considered timely and premising, efforts will be made to advance official limits of Soviet power. For the mement, these efforts are restricted to certain neighboring points conscived of here as being of immediate strategic necessity, such as northern Iran, Turkey, possibly Bornholm. However other points may at any time come into question, if and as concealed Soviet political power is extended to new areas. Thus a "friendly" Pessian Govt might be asked to grant Russia a port on Persian Gulf. Should Spain fall under communist control, question of Soviet base at Gibralter Strait might be activated. But such claims will appear on official level only when unofficial preparation is complete.
- (c) Russians will participate officially in international organizations where they see opportunity of extending Soviet power or of inhibiting or diluting power of others. Messow sees in USO not the mechanism for a permanent and stable world society founded on mutual interest and aims of all nations, but an arene in which aims just mentioned can be favorably pursued. As long as USO is considered here to serve this purpose, Soviets will remain with it. But if at any time they come to conclusion that it is serving to embarrass or frustrate their aims for power expansion and if they see better proppects for pursuit of these aims along other lines, they will not hesitate to abandon USO. This would imply, however, that they felt themselves strong enough to split unity of other nations by their withdrawal, to render USO ineffective as a threat to their aims or security, and to replace it with an international weapon more effective from their viewpoint. Thus Soviet attitude toward USO will depend largely on loyalty of other nations to it, and on degree of vigor, decisiveness and sochesiem with which these nations defend in USO the peaceful and hopeful concept of international life, which that organization represents to our way of thinking. I reiterate, Messow has no abstract devotion to USO ideals. Its attitude to that organization will remain essentially pragmatic and tactical.

(D) Toward colonial.

- (D) Toward colonial areas and backward or dependent peoples, Seviet policy, even on efficial plane, will be directed toward weakening of power, influence and contacts of advanced western nations, on theory that insofar as this policy is successful, there will be created a vacuum which will favor communist-Soviet penetration. J Soviet pressure for participation in trusteeship arrangements thus represents, in my opinion, a desire to be in a position to complicate and inhibit exertion of vestern influence at such points rather than to provide major channel for exertion of Soviet power. Latter motive is not lacking, but for this Soviets prefer to rely on other channels than official trusteeshiparrangements. Thus we may expect to find Soviets asking if or admission overywhere to trusteeship or similar arrangements and using levers thus acquired to weaken western influence emong such peoples.
- (E) Russians will strive energetically to develop Seviet representation in, and official ties with, countries in which they sense strong possibilities of epposition to western centers of power. This applies to such widely separated points as Germany, Argentine, Middle Eastern countries, etc.
- (F) In international economic matters, Soviet policy will really be dominated by pursuit of autorehy for Soviet Union and Soviet-dominated adjacent areas taken tegether. That, however, will be underlying policy. As far as efficial line is concerned, position is not yet clear. Soviet Govt has shown strange reticence since termination hostilities on subject foreign trade. If large scale long term credits should be forthcoming, I believe Soviet Govt may eventually again do lip service, as it did in 1930's, to desirability of building up international economic exchanges in general. Otherwise I think it possible Soviet foreign trade may be restricted largely to Soviets' own security sphere, including occupied areas in Germany, and that a cold official shoulder may be turned to principle of general economic collaboration among nations.

(G) With respect ...

- (6) With respect to cultural collaboration, lip service will likewise be rendered to desirability of deepening cultural contacts between peoples, but this will not in practice be interpreted in any way which could weaken security isolation of Soviet peoples. Actual manifestations of Soviet policy in this respect will be restricted to arid channels of closely shepherded official visits and functions, with super-abundance of voden and speeches and dearth of permanent effects.
- (H) Beyond this, Soviet official relations will take what night be called "correct" course with individual foreign govts, with great stress being laid on prestige of Soviet Union and its representatives and with punctilious attention to protocol, as distinct from good. manners.

Part IV. Following may be said as to what we may expect by way of implementation of basic Soviet policies on unofficial, or subterranean plane, i.e. on plane for which Soviet Govt accepts no responsibility.

Agencies utilized for promulgation of policies on this plane are following.

- 1. Inner central core of communist parties in other countries. While many of persons who compose this category may also appear and act in unrelated public capacities, they are in reality working closely together as an underground operating directorate of world communism, a concealed Comintern tightly coordinated and directed by Moscow. It is important to remember that this inner core is actually corking on underground lines, despite legality of parties with which it is associated.
- 2. Rank and file of communist parties; note distinction is drawn between these and persons defined in pgh 1. This distinction has become much sharper in recent years. Whereas formerly foreign communist parties represented a curious (and from Moscow's standpoint often inconvenient) mixture of conspiratory and legitimate activity, now the conspiratorial element has been neatly concentrated in inner circle and ordered to go underground, while rank and file - no longer even taken into confidence about realities of novement - are thrust forward as bone fide internal partisans of certain political tendencies ...

political tendencies within their respective countries, genuinely innocent of conspiratorial connection with foreign states. Only in certain countries where communists are numerically strong do they now regularly appear and act as a body. As a rule they are used to penetrate, and its influence or dominate, as case may be, other organisations less likely to be suspected of being tools of Seriet Govt, with a view to accomplishing their purposes through such organisations, rather than by direct action as a separate political party.

- 3. A wide variety of national associations or bodies which can bedominated or influenced by such penetration. These include: labor unions, youth leagues, vamen's organizations, racial societies, religious societies, social organizations, cultural groups, liberal magazines, publishing houses, etc.
- 4. International organisations which can be similarly penetrated through influence over various national components. Labor, youth and women's organisations are prominent among them. Particular, almost vital, importance is attached in this connection to international labor movement. In this, Moseow sees posibility of sidetracking western govts in world affairs and building up international lobby capable of compelling govts to take actions favorable to Soviet interests in various countries and of paralyzing actions disagreeable to USSR.
- 5. Russian Orthodox Church, with its foreign branches, and through it the Eastern Orthodox Church in general.
- Pan-Slav movement and other nevements (Azerbaijan, Armenian, Tucoman, etc.) based on racial groups within Soviet Union.
- 7. Govts or kgoverning groups willing to lend themselves to Soviet purposes in one degree or another, such as present Eulgarian and Yugoalav Govts, North Persian regime, Chinese Communists, etc. Not only propaganda machines but actual policies of these regimes can be placed extensively at disposal of USSR.

It may be expected that component parts of this far-flung apparatus will be utilized, in accordance w their individual suitability, as follows:

- (A) To undermine general political and strategic tial of major western powers. Efforts will be n sh countries to disrupt national self-confidence matring measures of national defense, to increas I and industrial unrest, to stimulate all forms ity. All persons with grisvances, whether economial, will be urged to seek redress not in medianyromise, but in defiant violent struggle for ustion of other elements of society. Here poor will t against rich, black against white, young against newcomers against established residents, etc.
- (B) On unofficial plane particularly violent efforts will be made to weaken power and influe peoples. On this level, no holds will be barre takes and weaknesses of western colonial administration will be mercilessly exposed and exploited. Liberal opinion in vestern countries will be mobilised to we colonial policies. Resentment emong dependent peoples will be stimulated. And while latter are being encount to seek independence of vestern powers, Soviet-dominated puppet political machines will be undergoing preparation to take over domestic power in respecyive colonial areas then "independence" is achieved.
- (0) Where individual govts stand in path of Soviet rosses, pressure will be brought for their removal on office. This can happen where govts directly oppose wiet foreign policy aims (Turkey, Iran), where they seal their rritories off against communist penetration (Switzerland, pete too strongly, like lab al), or where they on is important for communists to dominate. (Sometimes, o of these elements are present in a single case. Then mannist opposition becomes particularly shrill and savage.)
- (D) In foreign countries communists will, as a personal opendence, economic, political or moral. Their system handle only individuals who have been brought into lete dependence on higher power. Thus, persons who are

It is not by chance that even in USER local officials are kept constantly on move from one job to another, to prevent their taking root.

(E) Everything possible will be done to set major western powers against each other. Anti-British talk will be plugges among Americans, anti-American talk among British. Continentals, including Germans, will be taught to abhor both Angl-Saxon powers. Where suspicions exist, they will be farmed; where not, ignited. He effort will be spared to discredit and combat all efforts which threaten to lead to any sort of unity or cohesion among other countries, from which Russia might be excluded. Thus, all forms of international enganization not amenable to communist penetration and control, whether it be the Catholic Church, international communic concerns, or the international fraternity of royalty and aristocracy, must expect to find themselves under fire from many, and often unexpected, directions.

(F) In general, all Soviet efforts on unofficial international plane will be negative and destructive in character, designed to tear down sources of struggth beyond reach of Soviet control. This is only in line with besic Soviet instinct that there can be no compromise with rival power and khat constructive work can start only when communist power is dominant. But behind all this will be applied insistent, unceasing pressure for penetration and command of key positions in administration and especially in police apparatus of foreign countries. The Soviet regime is a police regime per excellence, reared in the dim half-world of Tearist police intrigue, accustomed to think primarily in terms of police power. This should never be lost sight of in gauging Soviet motives.

the international authority of our state be broken, if Soviet power is to be secure. This political force ha complete power of disposition over energies of one of mplete power of disposition over energies of one of rid's greatest peoples and resources of world's richest tional territory, and is borne along by deep and werful currents of Russian nationalism. In addition, it has an elaborate and for-flung apparatus for over of its influence in other countries, an apparatus of sing flexibility and verentility, managed by people so experience and skill in underground methods are bably without parallel in history. Finally, it is mingly inaccessible to considerations of reality in basic reactions. For it, the vast fund of objective fact about human society is not, as with us, the measure against which outlook is constantly being tested and reformed, but a grab-bag from which individual items are selected arbitrarily and tendentiously to bolster an outlook already preconceived.

This is admittedly not a pleasant picture. Froblem of how to cope with this force is undoubtedly greatest task our diplomany has ever faced, and probably greatest it will ever have to face. It should be point of departure from which our political general staff work at present juncture should proceed. It should be approached with same thoroughness and care as solution of major strategic jproblem in war, and if necessary, with no smaller outlay in planning effort. I cannot attempt to suggest all answers here. But I would like to record my suggest all answers here. But I would like to record my conviction that problem is (REFFAT IS) within our power tosolve - and that without recourse to any general military conflict. And in support of this conviction there are certain observations of a more encouraging nature I should like to make:

(1) Soviet power, unlike that of Hitlerite Germany, is neither schematic nor adventuristic. It does not work by fixed plans. It does not take unnecessary risks. Impervious to logic of reason, it is highly sensitive to logic of force. For this reason it can easily withdraw and usually does - when strong resistance is encountered at any point. Thus, if the adversary has sufficient force and makes clear his readiness to use it, he rarely he to do so. If situations are properly handled there need be no prestige-engaging showdowns.

- (2) Ganged against western world as a whole, Soviets are still by far the weaker force. Thus, their success will really depend on degree of cohesion, firmness and vigor which western world can master. And this is factor which it is within our power to influence.
- (3) Success of Soviet system, as form of internal power, is not yet finally proven. It has yet to be demonstrated that it can survive supreme test of successive transfers of power from one individual or group to snother. Lenin's death was first such transfer, and its effects wracked Soviet state for fifteen years after. Stalin's death or retirement will be second. But even this will not be final test. Soviet internal system will now be subjected, by virtue of recent territorial expension, to series of additional strains which once proved severe tax on Tsardom. We here are comminced that never since termination of civil war has mass of Russian people been emotionally farther removed from doctrines of Communist Party than they are today. In Russia, Party has now become a great and for the moment highly successful apparatus of dictatorial administration, but it has ceased to be a source of emotional inspiration. Thus, internal soundness and permanence of movement need not yet be regarded as assured.
- (4) All Soviet propaganda beyond Soviet security sphere is basically negative and destructive. It should therefore be relatively easy to combat it by any intelligent and really constructive program.

For these reasons I think we may approach calmly and with good heart problem of how to deal with Russia.

As to how this approach should be made, I only wish to advance, by way of conclusion, following comments:

- (1) Our first step must be to apprehend, and recognize for what it is, the nature of the movement with which we are dealing. We must study it with same courage, detachment, objectivity, and same determination not to be emotionally provided or unseated by it, with which doctor sutidies unruly and unreasonable individual.
- (2) We must see that our public is educated to realities of Russian situation. I cannot over-emphasise importance of this. Press cannot do this alone. It must be Mone mainly by Govt, which is necessarily more experienced and better informed on practical problems involved. In this we need not be deterred by ugliness of pasture. I am convinced that there would be far less hysterical anti-Sevictiam in our country today if realities of this situation were better understood by our people. There is nothing as dangerous or as terrifying as the unknown. It may also be argued that to reveal more information on our difficulties with Russia would reflect unfavorably on Russian-American relations. I feel that if there is any real rick here involved, it is one which we should have courage to face, and sooner the better. But I cannot see what we would be risking. Our stake in this country, even coming on heels of tremendous demonstrations of our friendship for Russian people, is remarkable small. We have here no investments jo guard, no actual trade to lose, virtually no citisens to protect, few cultural contacts to preserve. Our only stake lies in what we hope rather than what we have; and I am convinced we have better chance of realizing those hopes if our public is enlightened and if our dealings with Russians are placed entirely on realistic and matter-of-fact basis.

(3) Much depends on health and vigor of our own society. World communism is like malignant parasite which feeds only on diseased tissue. This is point at which demestic and foreign policies meet. Every courageous and incisive measure to solve internal problems of our own society, to improve self-confidence, discipline, morale and measurity spirit of our own people, is a diplomatic victory over Moscow worth a thousand diplomatic notes and joint occumulates. If we cannot abandon fatalism and indifference in face of deficiencies of our own society, Moscow will profit - Moscow cannot help profiting by them in its foreign policies.

(4) We must formulate and put forward for other nationals a much more positive and monstructive picture of sort of world we would like to see than we have put forward in past. It is not enough to urge people to develop political processes similar to our own. Many foreign peoples, in Europe at least, are tired and frightened by experiences of past, and are less interested in abstract freedom than in security. They are seeking guidance rather than responsibilities. We should be better able than Russians to give them this. And unless we do, Russians certainly will.

(5) Finally ...
