Introduction

Historical Background

Real and personal property taxation has had a complex development since its beginning in the mid-eighteenth century when Baltimore was a small town of only several hundred inhabitants. The earliest political body given authority for taxation was that of the Baltimore Town Commissioners established by the legislative act creating the town in 1729; the Maryland legislature first allowed the Commissioners to levy a tax in 1750 in order to defray the wages of their clerk. Other forms of taxation evolved as the town grew and its government developed leading to incorporation in 1795. The creation of the Special Commissioners in 1782 and the Board of Port Wardens in 1783 introduced some special taxes and fees attesting to the growth and changing needs of the city. Several years later, in 1785, standard and regular assessment policies came with the appointment of the Commissioners of the Tax for Baltimore City responsible first to the Baltimore County Court and later the Baltimore County Levy Court; these assessment responsibilities were absorbed by municipal agencies - the Appeal Tax Court in 1841 and the Department of Assessments in 1934 (part of the state government since 1975). Since the city's first charter in 1796 the collection of taxes has been the responsibility of the municipal government. The City Register and City Collector functioned respectively as treasurer and tax collector from that year giving way eventually to the new Department of Finance under the municipal charter of 1898.¹

The Records

This is an index to the earliest extant general property tax records maintained by the municipal government with the exception of several earlier special tax lists.² These records provide the names of individuals and organizations, amount of assessment and tax, payments, race, notation of some out-of-town residents, and occasionally occupations and property improvements. The records indexed in this volume include the four general property tax books for 1798, 1799-1800, 1801-1803, and 1804-1808 and the field assessment book for the year 1800.³

² These have been published in Richard J. Cox, "Baltimore City 1797 Special Tax List," National Genealogical Society Quarterly 66 (September 1978): 188-91 and "Some Early Residents of Baltimore, Maryland, 1785-1795," National Genealogical Society Quarterly 67 (September 1979): 202-09; (December 1979): 283-86.

³ The 1798 tax book is available only in a transcript made by Wilbur H. Hunter in 1944.

The Baltimore City Archives maintains a large number of tax records including the general property tax books, 1798-1915, RG4, Series 1, 263 volumes, and assessors's records and workbooks, 1800-1975, RG4, Series 2 and RG5, Series 2-2B, 7604 volumes. There is a complete inventory at the Baltimore City Archives for these records although only the records covered by this volume have been indexed. Many of these records are arranged by the political subdivisions of wards and districts starting with the tax books in 1818 and assessors' records in 1813; knowledge of the approximate location of the property and property owners will greatly facilitate the research use of these records.⁴

The value of these records is primarily as a complement to the other standard sources - the published city directories starting in 1796, the federal census records starting in 1790, and the earlier state assessment of 1783 and federal direct tax of 1798.⁵ The tax records are often limited in the amount of information provided, and it is difficult to determine if the person listed was actually a resident or absentee owner. These tax records do provide information on the relative economic worth of an individual and examined with other sources can assist in rounding out complete portraits of early Baltimoreans.

Using the Index

Over five thousand men, women, businesses and religious and civic organizations are listed in these tax records.⁶ The arrangement of the index is alphabetical with some variations. Names of companies are cross-referenced; Albright & Warner, for example, is also listed as Warner & Albright to better assist researchers curious about businesses and their ownership. The original spellings of the tax book compilers have been maintained although obvious variants have been noted in parentheses in the index; researchers should carefully peruse variant spellings when searching for specific individuals. Each entry includes the citation to the tax books and assessment book and the page number in that volume; the use of these originals is restricted to microfilm although photocopies off of the film can be made for a charge. References to estates, occupations, race, and residence in the original records have been placed within parentheses after the name entry. Other questions about the use of these records and the index should be addressed to the Baltimore City Archivist and Records Management Officer.

⁴ One of the best ways to determine these locations is to find the addresses in the published city directories and then locate the address on ward maps of the proper time period. For a list of the available ward maps refer to William G. LeFurgy, "Baltimore's Wards, 1797-1978: A Guide," Maryland Historical Magazine 75 (June 1980): 145-53.

⁵ For these and other records related to the city see Richard J. Cox and Patricia Vanorny, "The Records of a City: Baltimore and Its Historical Sources," Maryland Historical Magazine 70 (Fall 1975): 286-310 and Mary Keyser Meyer, Genealogical Research in Maryland: A Guide, 2nd ed. (Baltimore: Maryland Historical Society, 1976).

⁶ About forty-seven hundred, the vast majority, are for individual males.
