Joseph Young

In the City Court

Baltimore Southern Navigation Co. Baltimore City.

To The Honorable, The Judge of Said Court:

Joseph Young, by his attorney J. Steward Davis, sues Baltimore Southern Navigation for that on or about the 25th. day of June, 1919, the plaintiff corporation, by its duly authorized agent, and the defendant mutually agreed that the Plaintiff should furnish the defendant with a band of four musicians to entertain on an excursion boat, belonging to defendant corporation, said band to be employed on said ship of said defendant corporation until termination of summer excursion season on or about September 15th. and that defendant corporation should pay for said services of said band furnished by said plaintiff $125 weekly.

That on or about June 28, 1919, the Plaintiff pursuant to above named agreement furnished above mentioned band to defendant corporation and in violation of terms of above mentioned contract the defendant corporation by its duly authorized agent wrongfully discharged the said band and refused to permit them to serve as aforesaid but rehire the said band or part of same upon the said defendant corporation's own initiative and has never paid the same plaintiff the amount due him for his services.

That the plaintiff has ever since been and was always ready and willing to perform his part of above mentioned contract.

That the plaintiff has been unable to rehire the said members of above mentioned band, during season for which they would have entertained on above mentioned ship of corporation.

That plaintiff loss for the wrongful discharged of said band was $17.50 per week, and plaintiff claims $197.50 Herefore:

Affidavit
