FILM PRODUCER HELD ON WHITE SLAVE CHARGE

Elopement With Well-to-do Southern Beauty Leads To His Arrest
In This City On Federal Warrant Sworn Out By Girl's Sister

After a romance sweet, but brief, Charles H. White, moving picture film producer, of Raleigh, N. C., who eloped with a Southern beauty of that place and married her in Newport News, Va., was arrested and held under bond on charge of violating the Mann white slave act.

White is declared to admit that he is married to a woman in New York, but has a lawyer's receipt showing that divorce proceedings had been paid for. Objection of the well-to-do Raleigh sister to the marriage is responsible for the warrant.

J. Howard Payne, attorney for White is making an effort to secure the release and trial of his client before Judge Rose thru habeas corpus proceedings. United States Court in North Carolina are said to sit but seldom, and White would like to sit there.

MISS TINSLEY MAKES STATEMENT

Gives An Account Of Shooting Of Little Hortense Cooper

Rivalry was not the cause of the death of little Hortense Cooper last week according to Miss Tinsley, 503 Ogston street, who makes the following statement:

John Richards, came to my mother's home seemingly under the influence of liquor, he being an acquaintance of my nephew (James Tinsley) with whom he had worked. My nephew was called. He inquired of Richards, what the trouble was. Richards answered that he was drunk. He made several insulting remarks, and I attempted to caress me, to which I objected.

Thomas Brown, who boards with my mother, asked him to refrain from his bad language, and actions. Richards became angry, and he pulled out his revolver, remarking that if his actions didn't suit, this would be the doom of anyone whom interfered. Pointing to the revolver, my mother threatened to have him arrested, he told her to go so that he didn't care, and furthermore he would shoot his son in there.

My nephew finally got him to leave, he threatened to shoot anywhere, as he was not afraid to shoot his gun. My niece, Hortense Cooper, in company of several other children were playing in the street when Richards was attempting to ret. Richards to go home, Richards deliberately raised his gun, and fired over my nephew's shoulder in the direction of the children, the bullet hitting Hortense in the left breast.

There was no rivalry, as he was not, and never had been intimate with me, or any one in my family, having only known Richards through my nephew, with whom he had formerly worked. MISS LUCY TINSLEY, 503 Ogston Street.

Jewelry Only Clue To Murder

Baltimorean Main Witness Against William H. Campbell

D. C.

Washington, Feb. 17.—William Johnson and Rose Douglas, both of Baltimore, were chief witnesses in the trial of William H. Campbell for the murder of George Mann, white, last March 11. A gold watch valued at $10 and a diamond ring valued at $300 belonging to the dead woman and found by the police on Campbell is the connecting link that may send Campbell to the gallows.

William Johnson, laborer, testified that Campbell came to his home at 536 Greenwillow street in the middle of the March with a watch. This watch, Johnson said, Campbell told him belonged to his (Campbell's) mother, but as he had given her another one, he would be willing to sell that one for $2. Afterwards, the witness bought the watch from Campbell for $2. He wore it, Johnson said, until the detectives came from Washington after it last August.

SWEETHEART TESTIFIES
The other witness, Rose Douglas, Campbell's sweetheart, testified that she came by the Greenwillow street house one morning on her way to work and saw Campbell's coat hanging inside. She looked at the watch in the coat, she said, to see what time it was, and noticed a ring on the watch chain. She asked about it, she declared, and he told her she could not have it because it belonged to his mother. Then, the witness said, she took the ring and wore it to work. She continued in possession of this ring, she said, until the detectives came from this city after it.
