

JURY DELIBERATING BUS LINE MONOPOLY CASE IN SECOND DAY

A jury of 12 women yesterday continued to deliberate a decision in the government's suit against the National City Lines, Inc., Chicago, and others for violation of the anti-trust laws. The case went to a jury sitting in the court of Federal Judge William J. Campbell at 11 a. m. Friday and was locked up for the night when no decision was reached.

The Pacific City Lines, a subsidiary of National City; six companies manufacturing tires, buses, gasoline, and other supplies; and seven company officials, including E. Roy Fitzgerald, president of National City, are the other defendants. The trial began Feb. 14.

The government charged the defendants with conspiring to monopolize the transportation business in 42 cities thru contracts with manufacturing and supply companies. It charged that these companies were given exclusive contracts in return for financial assistance to the transportation systems.
