The CENTURY CLUB

A Central Civic Organization with a Vital Business, Industrial, Co-operative Program

To Baltimore Business and Professional Men:

That Baltimore may take her rightful place in the world of business and industrial expansion, that her thousands of young men and women coming from our schools may find proper avocations in life and that this job may not be left to chance, THIS ORGANIZATION HAS COME INTO BEING.

The basis of its object shall be to use efficient organization in business and industrial expansion.

First. It will be associated directly with the Baltimore Association of Commerce, and will co-operate with that great organization in promoting the industrial and business growth of Baltimore.

Second. It will conduct an intensive educational campaign, bringing to the attention of the group masses the importance of developing business within the group.

Third. It will systematically call to the attention of business men throughout the country the opportunities open in Baltimore. In this way it will bring to this city institutions like Poro College which will provide additional employment.

Fourth. It will join with the local forces in increasing jobs of every source and in increasing wages to a fair basis.

Fifth. It will conduct no business, but will seek to induce young men and women to enter the business field here in Baltimore and supply data and help along this line.

Sixth. It will hold a weekly luncheon during the fall, winter and spring months wherein business and professional men may thrash out their problems and hear discussions by experts.

In short, it will use intelligent organization to make the greatest social and economic use of the spending power of the group.

It hopes to enroll every business and professional man in its program, which, after all, is a program that will most benefit them.

BE CO-OPERATIVE AND JOIN THIS MOVEMENT

ped. It was called the Howard Normal School for Colored Teachers and was opened in 1870. Later it received some aid from the State and the main supply for teachers for the schools of the counties. Eventually (1911), the school was removed to Bowie.

In 1868 the State began in earnest to assume its obligations, and then, even as ever since, the facilities were far from being equal and adequate, the start was made.

Baltimore having been given specific authority to provide means, proceeded to set aside ten of the building then in use, for Negro students. The white teachers within the system were retained in these newly provided schools.

With this beginning our great school system has grown and developed. The way has not always been so cheerful and bright, but a constant improvement has been made.

For a long, long time, Negro teachers were not employed and some of the most bitter fights have been to accomplish this end. At other times, building, facilities and courses have been below standards and the fight thus, has been relentless and continuous. Foremost among the early leaders for these reforms and improvements were the late Rev. Dr. Harvey Johnson, William Alexander, Attorney Ashbie Hawkins and others. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People took up where these left off and the efforts are still being pushed.

Over this long process, however, there has developed in Maryland one of the best educational set-ups to be found South of the Mason and Dixon Line.

All counties have excellent elementary schools, most of these have accredited high schools, or facilities for getting to such. Four Colleges are available for Negro students while a number of the white colleges and universities are also opening facilities to a number of students, at least.

In Baltimore, in particular, are to be found great strides being made to assure the Negro equal facilities for acquiring an education. Building and standards are being raised and an effort at meeting the needs for scientific courses are being met.

In Baltimore are to be found two senior high schools and a half dozen junior high schools, vocational schools, a teachers training college and Morgan State College. Of course, all of these are not equal, in every sense of the word, to the white schools, but they symbolize the gigantic strides made since the early days of our State when educational opportunities first came to the Free Negro.

The brief sketches on some of the schools and colleges will have to suffice to indicate the trend, as a work of this sort cannot permit more.

Douglass High School

The Douglass High School is the evolution of the Baltimore School system. For several years after the elementary level had been reached the system gradually added additional work approaching high school levels. In 1883 this work was officially termed a High School and was located in a building on Holliday St. In 1887 it was moved to Saratoga St. in a more modern and better equipped building. It was first named the Colored High School in 1901, when a teachers' training or normal course was added.

In 1892 a Manual Training School was authorized with the view of developing a school of the pattern of Polytechnic. This department was combined with the two departments already established, in 1903, and the following year a vocational course was added.

In 1921 the school was moved to the new site at the corner of Pennsylvania Ave. and Dolphin St. Prior to this (1909) a Teachers' Training Course had been revamped and divorced from the high school work.

In 1923 the name was changed to The Frederick Douglass High School in honor of Maryland's greatest abolitionist. Two years later it moved to its present site at Calhoun and Baker Streets in what

With such a large percentage of Free Negroes within the State, it may be assured that efforts were made to acquire some knowledge of reading. That there were several small schools where Negroes could learn to read is known, but since most efforts were just the taking in of a few anxious persons into the homes of others who could read, the extent of these "schools" can never be known.

Mention is made here and there of such classes and schools. As early as 1750 one Rev. Thomas Bacon established in Talbott County a school for poor whites and colored.

In 1761 another by this same person was established in Frederick County.

Prior to 1800 Rev. Daniel Coker established a school.

In 1824 Rev. William Livingstone established a school in connection with St. James Episcopal Church.

Others mentioned here and there are—one in connection with Sharp Street Church; one in a building in the rear of the home of Mrs. Alexander, 191 S. Dallas St.; one at Thompsen and Stirling Sts.; one under the Rev. D. A. Payne; another under a Rev. John Fortie. While most of these were just classes, we will say, for elementary work, some assumed the name academies, thus indicating that work of a high school level was being undertaken. Thus, Daniel Coker's school carried this claim while the Rev. William Watkins' Academy at one time, used a building (incidentally, located where Camden B. & O. Station now stands). The Baptist School of 1854 with three teachers and 100 pupils.

The Maryland Statistical Gazetteer (1853) by Fisher, says there were 1616 Free Negro children—886 males and 930 females attending schools; that there were 21,062 free Negroes unable to read within Maryland. When one learns that the Free population of Maryland at this time was upwards to 75,000, he sees that the Free population was more than 70 per cent literate.

The year that the Civil War ended (1865), the State began to assume its responsibility of establishing public schools for Negroes but, in fact, it was three or more years before the actual work was begun in this direction.

The Baltimore Association and The Freedman's Bureau

In the meantime, other agencies were busy trying to do something for the newly freed Negroes. Among the several agencies that sought to help, the Baltimore Association, an organization of public-spirited friends, began the operation of schools throughout the State. The work of this organization deserves a warm place within the memory of our race and it is hoped that some student will in time, give a study and report on this great work.

In the first report of the State Department of Education (1868) the State admits having done nothing for the Negro, but praises the work of the Baltimore Association. It shows that there were 73 schools being operated, 22 of which were in Baltimore City, the others distributed through the counties, with more than 7,300 pupils in attendance. The cost was given at $52,515.14, and of this amount, Negroes had contributed, $9,821.19.

In the meantime, the Freedmen's Bureau had also opened work within the State. This organization worked closely with the above mentioned Association and its report of 1866 shows 51 schools being operated in 13 counties under 27 white and 42 Negro teachers. By 1867 the schools had increased to 81 schools and 81 Negro teachers.

In the meantime the Bureau had busied itself in the building of schools, a work that should have been the State's duty. It bought many of the Civil War Army barracks and hospitals, tore them down and from this lumber constructed small schools throughout the counties. Much of this construction was done by the Negroes themselves.

Along with this gigantic effort, the Bureau and Association initiated an effort to establish a Teachers' Training School. A building at St. and Saratoga Sts. was purchased at more than $10,000 and equip-
