usal than which the occasion had evoked, would ny paper have supposed that his days of life were iversity hand. To the inquiry which each "old made of the good Doctor as to the school-boy's life; the skilful, devoted physician, who never gave thought to self, where there was sickness amongst us that he could minister to, or pain that he might lessen. Patient, considerate, even of the often unreasonable whims and fancies of thoughtless youth, untiring and self-denying beyond the limits that professional duty might fix, his presence brought sunshine to the sick bed, and his pleasant, genial manner, gladness to many a sufferer's heart. He loved the good name of the College scarcely less than he prized his own professional reputation; and to question or to throw slur of any kind on its fair fame, was to awaken in the venerable old man indignation of which few would ordinarily reckon him capable, and to invoke a vigorous defense, whose strength and ardor many a younger man would have failed to display.

During a professional career in the District of Columbia which extended over nearly half a century, Dr. Tyler secured for himself a reputation for skill, devotion, and patient care-taking in the discharge of his duties as a physician, which placed him second to no practitioner in the Capital; his generous, manly nature, the soul of honor and integrity, won him the esteem and friendship of many distinguished men, who have been temporary or permanent residents of the District for the last fifty years; and when misfortunes swept away from him, in his advanced years, the fruits of laborious toil, which it was his legitimate expectation to enjoy in tranquil rest from work, he rose superior to all the disheartening circumstances of disaster, and addressed himself with the vigor of youth to the labors that consumed his old age.

With a sorrow that is unfeigned, with a regret that must be felt far beyond the College walls, which welcomed him in his manhood's prime and cherished him to his life's close, do we chronicle the loss which our house has sustained; and in paying this poor tribute to the good Doctor's memory, we bid farewell to as faithful a servant and as loyal, loving a friend as Georgetown, in its century of existence, has known.

GEORGE CARROLL HORSEY.

Oct 1884

No death recorded in these columns ever carried grief to a larger and more devoted circle of mourners than that which we here sorrowfully give place to. Had we been called upon to select from among the students of his time one to whom robust health, a vigorous constitution and unquestioned steadiness of habits promised a long life, the choice would certainly have fallen on Carroll Horsey. A victim to that fatal disease, typhoid fever, which prostrates in a day the stoutest frame, he has fallen in the very dawn of manhood, and the promise of a long and honorable career cut short with the briefest warning.

George Carroll Horsey was the son of Outerbridge Horsey, Esq., of Frederick County, Md., and was allied to some of the most distinguished families of that section of his native State. He entered Georgetown College in 1873-'74, and followed the course by successive promotions until he reached the class of Poetry, when he withdrew to enter upon the study of a profession. Up to the time of his removal to Kansas City, Mo., four years ago, he spent the intervening years partly in the study of law and partly in assisting his father in his extensive business. For a time he practiced law in Kansas City, but afterwards took charge of the largest distillery in that place.

On Sunday, the 31st of August, the physician announced to him that he was ill with typhoid fever. Contrary to the wish of friends, who would themselves have nursed him, he insisted on being removed to the hospital in charge of the sisters of St. Joseph. On his arrival in the house he expressed a wish to make his confession, but the sister, to whose care he had been entrusted, counseled delay, as his illness presented no alarming features. Again was he persistent, declaring that he would have all the rites of the church before there was imminent danger of his becoming delirious. He carried his point and on Thursday, September 4th, his life closed peacefully. During his brief illness his genuine piety, his patience and his unquestioning submission to the will of God, edified all. Not a murmur escaped his lips when he found that his parents would be unable to reach him. As one who knew him intimately writes, "he had his mother's firm faith and a purity of heart remarkable in a young man." Always faithful in the practice of his religion, he gave his parents never a moment's anxiety on account of his morals. Fast growing to be his father's reliance and the pride always of his mother's heart, he was a son in whose life their fullest hopes had been confidently centered, and whose untimely death has come upon them with almost crushing force.

The friends of his college days, who read this record of Carroll's consoling, though sad death, will not refuse him the tribute of loving and faithful remembrance, where remembrance is of most worth, and as their friendship clung to him while living, their prayers will follow him beyond the grave. He died at the early age of twenty-five.

MRS. GOVERNEUR DEAD

The Result Of A Fall Which Took Place About Two Weeks Ago.

A DISTINGUISHED FAMILY

She Was Granddaughter Of Thomas Sim Lee.

The Life Of Mrs. Mary Digges Gouverneur
At Needwood, In Frederick County—A Cultivated And Charming Woman—Some Maryland Family History.

[Special Dispatch to the Baltimore Sun.]

PETERSVILLE, FREDERICK COUNTY, MD., Oct. 4.—Mrs. Mary Digges Gouverneur died today at her home, "Needwood," near Petersville, Frederick county, Md.

Mrs. Gouverneur, while nursing her nephew, Joseph Lee, lately returned from Santiago, fell and fractured her hip about two weeks ago, and the shock sustained, with her advanced age, caused her death.
She was in her eighty-ninth year, and was the oldest member of the Lee family. She was born in Baltimore. She leaves a brother, Thomas Sim Lee, who resides at "Needwood." She was the aunt of Charles O'D. Lee and Columbus Lee, of Baltimore. Her funeral will take place Thursday at Petersville, Frederick county, Maryland.

Mrs. Gouverneur was the widow of the late Samuel Gouverneur, whose first wife was a daughter of President Monroe. She had for many years in her possession a most interesting correspondence of President Monroe and her husband.

Mrs. Gouverneur was the granddaughter of Thomas Sim Lee, the second Governor of the State of Maryland, who succeeded Thomas Johnson during the revolution, and who served from 1779 to 1783 and again from 1792 to 1794. Governor Lee was a statesman and a patriot and man of distinguished ability. His wife was Mary Digges.

"Needwood," the home of the Lees, is a splendid estate, situated in one of the most picturesque and fertile portions of Frederick county. It is at the foot of South Mountain, just below Crampton's gap, a portion of the battlefield of South Mountain. Here Mrs. Gouverneur has lived many years an active and useful life, riding in her carriage frequently to the neighboring village of Burkittsville, or visiting in the neighborhood. She was a charming lady and a most cultivated and interesting companion. She numbered among her friends the late S. Teackle Wallis, who used to visit at Needwood.

Another granddaughter of Gov. Thomas Sim Lee was the wife of Charles Carroll, a grandson of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and the father of ex-Gov. John Lee Carroll.

HON. OUTERBRIDGE HORSEY.

Sudden Demise of One of the Most Prominent Citizens of the County.

Hon. Outerbridge Horsey, founder of the Needwood Distillery, in Burkittsville district, this valley, and one of the most prominent residents of Frederick county, died at 10.30 o'clock last Sunday morning at his home near Burkittsville from an acute attack of heart failure, in the 83d year of his age. He was in his usual good health Saturday and was out walking when he was taken suddenly ill with a chill, which was accompanied by an acute pain that seemed to affect his whole system. His physicians, Dr. Levin T. West, of Brunswick, and Dr. Gibson, of Burkittsville, were summoned and remained with him several hours. They were with him again Sunday morning for some time, but he continued to grow worse until he expired. His oldest daughter, Miss Elizabeth Horsey, and his oldest son, Outerbridge Horsey, Jr., were at his bedside when he died. His wife died about 18 months ago. He leaves four daughters and three sons. His funeral took place Tuesday at 1 o'clock from his home and interment was made at Petersville. Many prominent men from New York, Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore were present. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. The remains were taken to St. Mary's Catholic Church, Petersville, this valley, where Mr. Horsey had worshiped many years and where a solemn requiem mass was celebrated by R. v. J. H. O'Connell, the pastor. Rev. John H. O'Rourke, rector of the Novitiate, Frederick, preached the sermon. Other preachers present were Rev. Louis O'Donovan, of the Baltimore Cathedral; Rev. Dr. Wm. L. O'Hara, president of Mount St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg; Rev. John B. Gaffney, former pastor of St. Mary's Church, and Rev. Thomas Lee, of Washington. The pallbearers were Outerbridge Horsey, Jr., Thomas Sim Lee Horsey, Charles Carroll Lee Horsey, sons of Mr. Horsey; Charles O'Donnell Lee and Thomas Sim Lee, Jr., of Baltimore, and Allen Rohrbach, of Frederick.

Hon. Outerbridge Horsey was born in Frederick county in February, 1819. His father was Outerbridge Horsey, who at one time was United States Senator from Delaware. His mother was Miss Lee, the daughter of Gov. Thomas Sim Lee, of Maryland. He was educated at Mt. St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, this county. After completing his studies at that institution, he went to Baltimore, where he studied law and later opened a law office. He married Miss Carroll a few years before the war, who was a descendent of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a cousin of Gov. John Lee Carroll, of Howard county. Mr. Horsey was also related to the Carrolls. He gave up the practice of law and moved to Frederick county, taking up his residence at "Needwood" the beautiful place which belonged to the Lee estate, between Petersville and Burkittsville, this valley. In the year 1850 he commenced the manufacture of the whisky bearing his name, which became famous. After the war Mr. Horsey conceived the idea of giving the product of his distillery the benefit of a sea voyage, believing that improvement would result. He shipped a number of barrels around Cape Horn to the Pacific Coast, and he found the liquor so much improved by the voyage that he at once placed it upon the market under the brand of "Golden Gate," which for years has been well known and popular. He organized his plant into a stock company a few weeks ago among his sons. He was one of the largest landowners in Frederick county and has always been prominent in political, social and business circles. He was one of the best-known Democrats in the State. He was frequently mentioned for the nomination for Governor.—When John Lee Carroll was nominated for Governor, Hon. S. T. Wallis strongly urged that the nomination be given to Mr. Horsey. Mr. Horsey was a candidate for the State Senate in Frederick county (about 1875), but was defeated by Dr. Lewis H. Steiner. He was State director of the B. & O. Railroad for a number of years. He was a member of the Maryland Constitutional Convention of 1867. He served as a member of the National Democratic Committee some years ago and was succeeded by Senator A. P. Gorman.—In recent years he resided quietly at his country home, Needwood, on the "Merryland Tract," near Burkittsville. He also had a residence at the national capital which was generally occupied by his family during the winter months. His home on the "Merryland Tract" has always been one of the most hospitable of the many beautiful homes in Frederick county. Mr. Horsey's immediate family consists of three daughters and two sons. One child, a son, died some years ago. Mr. Horsey while a man of large fortune, was always of a liberal spirit and dispensed charity with a gracious hand.
