THE DYING YEAR.

From the old woods, dim and lovely, Compa a moan. There the whole are sighing only,
"Summer's gone!"

All the bright and sunly hours,
And the green and leafy bowers.
With the Summer's lebest flowers.

And the grein and leafy bowers.
With the Summer's latest flowers
Are faded-now
And the brow
Of the waning year
Has been twined with dying leas
And the gathering of the sheaves
Tells us Autumn's late.

Now the winds go loudly mouning. Through the voles:
And the fore threes are grouning.
Mourful takes.
Of doesn's that swiftly guther.

Of the com ng wintry weather, Of the snow that, like a feather, Of the snow that, they a featurer,
Soon will full
And the cull
Of both is bighing
Over a 1 the coppling streams:
And the Summer's linkering kleams

Are sadly dying.

The the warding, warding twilight
Of the year
That lovershow, all strangely bright,
Round as here
And soon the year will pursuaway.
Lake the light of an Autumn day,
Adown old Winter's dim highly ay
To its touls;
And the gloom
Of the Silent Local
Will rest out the bright years flown Will rest on the bright years flown; And the wirds of Time will maken O'er the dreamless band;
