John Hunt,
Perfumer, Hair Cutter and Dresser to Ladies and Gentlemen, near Market-street bridge.
REGULARLY receives the Ladies and Gentlemen of this city and vicinity, that he is cutting hair in future at twenty-five cents each, at his own room, but for cutting hair out of his house, the price will be fifty cents as usual. This arrangement is forced upon him, by the multiplicity of cut door business, which renders it impossible for him to give the attention to their applications, which his most sanguine friends and a sense of gratitude for past favors prompts him. His employers are requested, if not convenient to call, to send their messages the day before his services are wanted at their own houses, and they will be strictly and generally attended to, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.
