

ing at large, and do not like confinement. This goose, however, had contracted such a friendship for the yard-dog, that she continually kept near his house, in which he was chained, quitting it only when she went for food, and the moment she had eaten it, returning to her post. Thus she sat all-day by the house of her favorite; though she never attempted to go into it, unless it rained. If the dog barked, she immediately began to cackle, flew at the person with whom she supposed the dog to be offended, and endeavored to bite his legs. Sometimes she attempted to partake of the dog's food; but this the dog, who repaid the warmth of her friendship with apparent indifference, would not permit. When the rest of the poultry retired to rest, she would not quit her dog without compulsion. In the morning, when driven to the field with the others, there was no getting her away from the gate of the court-yard, where she could at least have a sight of the dog, and before which she would sit the whole day. At length the owner of the faithful goose resolved to leave her to follow her own inclinations, and not afflict her by any forcible separation. Being thus at liberty to obey the impulse of her attachment, she paraded about the yard at night with the dog, while he was on the watch; and in the day, when he took a walk into the village, she accompanied him, sometimes walking, sometimes flying, to keep pace with his trot. This extraordinary attachment continued till the dog's death, which happened two years after it had been first noticed. During the illness of the dog, she never left him, even to procure food, and would probably have been starved if some corn had not been placed in a dish by the dog's house. The whole of the time she staid in the house, and would not suffer any one to come near it, except the person who brought food for the dog and herself. The end of this goose was melancholy: After the death of the dog, she would not leave the house for a long time. At length, a dog of nearly the same size and colour being procured as his successor, the poor creature, deceived by outward appearance, and supposing it to be her old friend, went confidently into the house to the dog, who seized her by the neck, and killed her on the spot.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

York, August 24.

MRS. THORNTON'S MATCHES.

In consequence of Mr. Brumford's declining to ride, Mrs. Thornton walked or rather cantered, in a most excellent style, over the course, accompanied by Colonel Thornton, agreeable to the terms of the match, for four hogheads of Cotti Roti, 2000gs. h. ft. and for 600 gs. pp. bet by Mrs. Thornton.

Afterwards commenced a match, in which the above lady was to ride two miles against Mr. Buckle, the Jockey, well known at New-market and other places of sport, as a rider of the first celebrity. Mrs. Thornton appeared dressed for the contest, in a purple cap and waistcoat, nankin colored skirts, purple shoes, and embroidered stockings. She was every way in health and spirits, and seemed eager for the decision of the match. Mr. Buckle was dressed in a blue cap, with blue bodied jacket and white sleeves. Mrs. Thornton carried 9st. 6lb. and Mr. Buckle 13st.—At half past three they started; Mr. Buckle then put in trial his jockey-ship, and passed the lady, which he kept for only a few lengths, when Mrs. Thornton, by the most excellent, we may truly say—horse-ship—pushed forward, and came in in a style far superior to any thing of the kind we ever witnessed, gaining her race by half a neck.

The manner of Mrs. Thornton's riding is certainly of the first description; indeed her close seat and perfect management of her horse, her bold and steady jockeyship, amazed one of the most crowded courses we have for a long time witnessed; and on her winning, she was hailed with the most reiterated shouts of congratulation.

Mrs. Thornton rode Louisa, sister to Kill Devil, by Pegasus, out of Nelly. Mr. Buckle rode Allegro, by Pegasus, out of Allegrandi's dam.

We have authority to state, that it was much against Mrs. Thornton's inclination to ride over the course for the match, had she not been obliged to do so, agreeable to the conditions of the articles with Mr. Brumford.

NEW-ORLEANS, Sept. 14.

We can state, from a source that may be relied on, that an army of 5000 men is on its march from Mexico, to strengthen the Spanish frontier on Louisiana. We cannot but think it would be advisable for our government to throw a few thousand troops into this country. Even tho' we should remain at peace, it would be well to shew a state of preparation for war.

STOLEN.

THE Person who was at a certain house in Wilke's-street, Fell's Point, on Sunday evening last, is requested to return the five SILVER TEA-SPOONS, marked with the letters I. S. P. and SUGAR-TONGS, as it is well known that he took them, with him when he left the house, and have been seen in his possession since.

N. B. If said things are not returned against the first of next month, he will be made a public example of.

The fine ship Sidney, built by captain Uriah Coffin, for Mr. James Manning, of New-York, was launched at Athens, last week. This is the third ship built at that place this season.

Our letter from the Lazaretto, yesterday noon, says, "This morning arrived the brig Lydia, capt. McCulloch, in 16 days from St. Thomas, with rum and sugars, to J. McGurach. Captain McCulloch informs me that the ship William from the Isle of May had put into St. Thomas, in distress, but sailed again for Philadelphia, three days before the Lydia, as did the schooner Sea Flower, for Wilmington." (Phil. True American)

In one of our late English papers we find the following, which was extracted from a pamphlet, written by an English gentleman just escaped from Faencz. (Arg. Gaz.)

"Moreau's behavior was distinguished by a mild and manly composure. A general, his friend, who bowed to him in the face of the court when he appeared with the group of the accused in the situation allotted to them, (each in the care of a gendarmarie or bailiff soldier, sitting at his side) was banished from Paris the next day.

"Bonaparte, as well as the inhabitants of Paris, were weary of the length of the trial: and at the end of two weeks he peremptorily ordered it to be finished. The public was in agitation, and the people who generally take no interest in any public act, unless accompanied with a show and procession, crowded the passages of the palace of justice, anxious for the fate of Moreau. At a very late hour, on the last night of trial, the intentions of government were not known; for it could hardly be called the decision of a court of justice.

"When the moment of sentence approached, Fouché, the minister of the police, and Moncey, the general of gendarmarie, of Paris, gained admittance to Bonaparte in his closet, anxious for his fate, or rather for their own, either as entangled in his train, or as instruments of his tyrannic rule.—Should the sentence on Moreau produce any public commotion, they knew that this must be fatal to their master and to his system.

"The judges, believing that Moreau was to die, sentenced him to death, and dispatched notice of their decision to Bonaparte for his approbation. Fouché and Moncey, declared to him, that he was lost if Moreau was condemned to die; as the soldiers in the barracks over which Moncey had command, had shown decided signs of discontent; and Fouché knew from his multitude of spies, what were the sentiments of the people. It was a serious and trembling moment for them all. Bonaparte yielded to the opinion which their dread of their own situation had given them courage to speak out—and sent and signified to the judges (who were then waiting for orders) that they must revise the sentence.

"They then supposed that they were to acquit Moreau, and accordingly passed a sentence of not guilty; and again dispatched a messenger to the Thuilleries, that they might be sure not to mistake what was expected of them, and above all not to displease the man whose displeasure is followed by banishment and death.

"The minister and the general still waited in the closet of Bonaparte, and now again remonstrated to this effect:—Your fate is sealed, for if this verdict is suffered to be made public, the soldiers and the people will bear about the acquitted general in triumph.

"A third time the sentence was sent back to be new modelled; and thirce did the judges pass a different sentence in one evening, on the devoted head of Moreau, before they found one which, tempering the usurper's design of destroying the general with his fears for his own immediate fate (awakened by the opinions of his uncalled counsellors, on this dangerous crisis,) it was judged expedient to act upon.

"When, at last, the sentence was made public, the people were happy at its comparative lenity, for few expected that Bonaparte would relax. The fear of a renewal of those general and public scenes of slaughter, which might have ensued had Moreau been brought out to suffer, were predominant in their minds, and they gladly accepted any compromise for present tranquillity."

In turning over the pages of Doctor Morse's "American Geography," in the description of Virginia, is the following particular. "In Albemarle County is MONTICELLO, the seat of President Jefferson. The summit of the mount, where his house stands, is 500 feet above the circumjacent country. The prospect is extensive and charming. Mr. Jefferson has more than 1,109 acres of cultivated land. In 1797 he had 320 acres of wheat, 160 of corn, 320 of clover, 320 of peas and potatoes, and 120 workmen. He has a manufactory of nails, which turns out a ton of nails in a month."—If it is asked, whence has MONTICELLO its name! The answer is from "Mons et Calam," which properly rendered, signifies "a height elevating towards the skies." Here it is, the illustrious CHIEF of a great and rising nation occasionally retires, and in the sweetness of repose, contemplates not only a world, but the universe at large.—What was said of the renowned Locke, may with greater propriety be applied to the American Sage and Philanthropist.

"—He has a soul, wide as the sea,
"Calm as the night, bright as the day,
"There do his vast ideas play."

AN EPISTLE TO BACHELORS.
"Take unto thyself a wife, and obey the ordinance of God: take unto thyself a wife, and become a faithful member of society. But examine what care, and fix not suddenly:—on thy present choice depends the future happiness of thee and thy posterity.

If much of her time is destroyed in dress and ornaments; if she is enamoured with her own beauty, and delights with her own praise; if she laugheth much and talketh loud; if her feet leadeth not in her father's house, and her eyes with boldness rove on the faces of men, though her beauty were as the Sun in the firmament of Heaven, turn thy face from her charms, turn thy feet from her paths, and suffer not thy soul to be ensnared by the allurements of thy imagination.

But when thou findest sensibility of heart, joined with softness of manners; an accomplished mind, with a firm agreeable to thy fancy; take her home to thy house, she is worthy to be thy friend, thy companion in life, the wife of thy bosom.

O cherish her as a blessing sent thee from Heaven: let the kindness of thy behavior endear thee to her heart.

She is the mistress of thy house; treat her therefore, with respect, that thy servants may obey her.

Oppose not her inclinations without cause; she is the partner of thy cares, make her also the companion of thy pleasures.

Reprove her faults with gentleness, exact not her obedience with rigor.

Trust thy secrets in her breast, her counsels are sincere, than shall be deceived.

Be faithful to her bed; for she is the mother of thy children.

When pain and sickness assault her, let thy tenderness soothe her affliction; a look from thee, of pity and love, shall alleviate her grief, or mitigate her pain; and be of more avail than ten physicians.

Consider the delicacy of her sex, the tenderness of her frame; and be not severe to her weakness, but remember thine own imperfections."

From a Connecticut paper.
Died, in Haddam, on the 25th of August, James Child, aged 22 years; a young man of an amiable disposition and agreeable in his manners. Some time in February last, he purchased and made use of a wash for the itch, known by the name of "Dr. Hall's new invented Itch Solution;" soon after the use of this and in consequence of it he began to complain of a weakness and loss of the use of his limbs, which symptoms continued to increase upon him gradually, with the addition of wandering pains in various parts of his body, until some time in June,

July, when he was attacked by a slight paralytic shock, succeeded by a violent pain in the head; his sweating and chills at this time subsided; the pain in the head gradually abated until about the 17th of August, when he was afflicted with laborious respiration, which terminated in death as above. The phial containing the remainder of the wash may be seen at the house of Dr. Levi Ward in Haddam.

N. B. This unfortunate young man was visited, after he had used the above poison, by Doctors Osborne, Ward and Clark.

* The Itch Water on examination, is evidently a solution of Sal Ammoniac and corrosive sublimate of Mercury, a very active and dangerous medicine, especially when directed by men as illiterate as this vendor of a nostrum, who calls himself Doctor Hall.
