From the ENQUIRER.

On the subject of Tripolitan affairs, general Eaton preserves a marked and decorous silence. He declares, however, that he had no power to treat with the Bashaw of Tripoli; and he contradicts the ridiculous and invidious tale, which was cooked up by one of the federal prints of Boston; that Col. Lear had been prompted to conclude a rash and premature treaty, through a jealous apprehension lest the Bashaw should appeal to the superior generosity of gen. Eaton, & least he should run away with all the honors of the pacification. Col. Lear is said to have concluded the treaty, from a fear lest the Bashaw should execute his threats of putting to death the American captives.
If such was really his inducements, the conduct of Col. Lear certainly needs no other justification. The loss of three hundred Americans is not surely to be put into competition with a ransom of 60,000 dollars; and even the risk and danger of such a catastrophe ought not to have been encountered for so small a sum.
Had Col. Lear waved the negotiation until the gallant Eaton had ransomed our prisoners with the sword, our triumph would have been much more glorious: but it would have been an indelible disgrace upon the annals of our nation, had the lives of so many men been sacrificed thro' a misguided economy.
With respect to the Ex-Bashaw of Tripoli, Gen. Eaton has merely informed the Editor, that he left him at Syracuse in Sicily, and that he had no intention of visiting this country.
As Gen. Eaton left Gibraltar about the 6th of September, it may be supposed that he has brought some recent and perhaps important intelligence from the Mediterranean. The information which he has given us on the subject is in fact not without its interest. The most interesting and the most authentic is the event which we find announced in the following letter from Mr. Mountford, secretary of Mr.
Lear and now our charge d'affaires at Algiers; for the copy of which we are indebted to the politeness of Gen. Eaton.
COPY.
Algiers, September 9, 1805.

SIR,
I have only a few moments to inform you, our affairs here are well.
On the 30th ult. the soldiers rose in a body and murdered the Dey and his prime minister.
A new Dey was immediately elected and not a life was lost except the above mentioned.
I forbear to detain the Nautilus, having nothing very urgent to communicate.
I have the honor to be, &c.
(Signed) J. MOUNTFORD, Charged d'affaires, at Algiers.

Capt. CAMPBELL.
In our paper of the 4th of Oct. we have already detailed the causes and the calamities of the first insurrection at Algiers on the 29th June. The Paris Moniteur of the 2d Sept. contains the same miser-re record of carnage and rapine down to the 27th July. It gives the most afflicting picture of the murder and the robbery of the unfortunate Jews. "The general massacre of the Jews, says that paper, save only the women and children, was principally conducted by the soldiers.
They were assisted by the barbarous populace of the city; they were animated by the joyous shouts of the women, more hideous than the furies, who were scattered over the terraces and the streets.
Fortunately it was Saturday, the holiday of the Jews, when a very small number was to be seen in the streets. On many occasions however the soldiers broke into their houses, but the riches which offered themselves to their view, were the sa-vours of the Hebrew tribe; they abandoned the carnage to give themselves up to pillage." The Moniteur adds that the assassin of Bu'nah after he had received the chaplet of pardon, and obtained permission to leave the country, had taken refuge in the English pavilion, and that a few days after he was dispatched by the English consul to Gibraltar and some said to London. Every thing in fact announced the dissolution of order, the reign of an infuriated soldiery, the massacre of the Turks by the Moors, and the downfall of the Dey. The intelligence which is now brought by gen. Eaton, confirms these forebodings and announces the catastrophe of the insurrection. The description which Mr. Eaton gave us of the causes and consequences of this tragical event, was uncommonly bold, appropriate and picturesque.

The dialogue between the captain and the Mufti was given in the highest style of the Drama. His technical accuracy, is enough for us to admire, but we shall scarcely presume to imitate. He said: That the Dey had rendered himself unpopular at Algiers, by the peace and feebleness of his administration. His crusaders were idle in the port; the country was disturbed by the dissention of a fanatic, who had visited Mecca; and the city was deprived of its customary supplies.
The soldiers at length broke out into open rebellion, and placed at their head a celebrated captain of Algiers, who had distinguished himself by the capture of a Portuguese ship. They remonstrated with the Dey, and commanded him to leave the throne. To leave the throne in that country is the same as losing his head. The Dey expostulated & resisted.
But the soldiers were obstinate, and the unfortunate Dey was forced to yield to their impunity. "I care nothing (said he, addressing himself to the insurgents in (the hall of audience) about the destiny which awaits me. I shall die contented.

It is what may a younger and better man than myself has done before me. Fought in fact to rejoice that I have lived to see my present length of days. But I feel for my family; my children." "You know, cried they, into whose hands they will fall." The Dey dismounted from his throne, and attended by his prime minister, approached the door of the hall, when they were immediately cut to pieces.
The regency was now offered to the captain; but he prudently refused the dangerous honor. He told them that he was not at all versed in the foreign relations of Algiers; nor did he know enough of the civil law to direct the administration of justice: The present disturbances had arisen partly from religion, and it was but proper that the reins of government should be put into the hands of the Mufti. "As for my part, said the wary Mufti to the messenger who invited him to the throne, my thoughts are fixed upon another world. It is my office to persuade and instruct, but not to command the people." But the soldiers were once more obstinate in their resolution, and the Mufti was conducted to the palace of the Dey. "Is it not much more becoming you, said the elected Dey to the captain of the insurrection, to direct the affairs of the government?
You have an arm." True, said the captain, but you have a head. The head is more powerful than the arm; because it directs it." At length this curious and singular contention was put an end to by a compromise, which attached them both to the administration. The Mufti was henceforth to be the Dey, and the captain was to be placed at the head of the army.
It is the opinion of general Eaton, that this important revolution will render the regency of Algiers more moderate in its administration. All the Dey's have been hitherto taken from the soldiers, and not from the priests. It is no doubt a fact universally admitted, that all superstitious establishments, whilst they debase the spirit, have often contributed to soften the ferocity of their votaries.
With respect to our relations with Spain, Gen. Eaton is unable to give us any information.
It is believed, in the best informed circles of Gibraltar, that a war on the continent was inevitable.
Whilst at Gibraltar, he had curiosity to review the Spanish encampments in the neighborhood, with an excellent spyglass. They appeared to him more like flying camps, than regular encampments.
They had no heavy artillery, and it seemed to be a romantic conjecture, that they had any design of attacking Gibraltar.
Lord Nelson was said to have arrived before Cadix, to reinforce the blockading squadron under Collingwood & Calder.
A squadron was fitting out at Malta, supposed by some to be destined to Egypt, and by others to Sicily. It was his own opinion, that the next intelligence which should arrive from that quarter of the Mediterranean, would announce the invasion of Sicily.
A squadron of 160 British transports conveyed by 15 men of war was reported to have left Madeira about the 6th or 8th October. They had taken an easterly course: Their destination completely unknown. Some supposed they were bound to the West Indies, and others to the Cape of Good Hope. If we are not mistaken, general Eaton observed that the Raiso-nable, whose crew is so honorably spoken of in the following letter, was one of the convoy:
SIR,
Allow me as consul of the United States of America in this island, to have the honor of assuring you and the officers of his Britannic Majesty's ship Raiso-able, of the high sense entertained by me of their exertions, on the night of the 8th inst. in saving at the imminent hazard of their lives, the ship Octavia of New York, with her valuable cargo from being destroyed by the flames, which, but from their prompt, zealous and humane assistance must inevitably have been the case.
Impressed with these sentiments, Sir, I will not fail conveying them by the earliest means in my power to the President of the United States, and to the parties concerned, as well as every particular, of a service so truly honorable and meritorious.
Notwithstanding my earliest desire to compensate in some measure the exertions of the seamen belonging to his Britannic Majesty's ship, still as the proceeds of the sales are held in the hands of the officers of the Custom House; betwixt whom, and the civil judge there has arisen a dispute in respect to the right of the property until the decision is given, or powers forwarded by the underwriters to whom I shall certainly represent the right of a compensation adequate to the service rendered.
Permit me to have the honor of subscribing myself with every sentiment of consideration and great respect.
Your most ob't. humble servant,
M. L.
JAMES RAWLEY, Esq. Commander of his Britannic Majesty's ship Raiso-able.
Tunchal Roads, September 23d, 1805.
COPY.

SIR,
I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your letter, communicating to myself and the officers of his Majesty's ship Raiso-able, under my command, your thanks for the assistance we were so fortunate as to afford the ship Octavia, of New York, when on fire on the night of the 8th instant.
I beg leave in my own name, and for the officers of the Raiso-able, to express our sense of the very handsome manner in which you have conveyed your sentiments on the occasion; and to assure you that we feel every satisfaction in the success of our endeavors to preserve a ship bearing the flag of the United States of America.
I request, Sir, that you will accept an assurance of the consideration, with which I remain,
Sir, Your very ob't. humble servant, (Signed) JAMES RAWLEY.

of his Britannic Majesty's America, &c. &c.
