

emperor and of the country. They are in the ranks of our victorious phalanxes, where they vie with the old soldiers, and it is to the prudence which relied on their bravery and on the genius which employed them, that the empire is indebted for its safety and glory.

"It is to this entire devotedness, it is to this full confidence of the people and army, in its emperor, that France is indebted for beholding the war carried 250 leagues from her frontiers, and all the calamities inseparable from it fall on the heads of those who provoked it.

"Senators, what the foresight of his majesty proposed last year to your wisdom, is not less necessary, is even still more necessary at the present day.

"A new conscription must prepare to carry if necessary, to the banks of the Rhine, the Vistula, the Spree and the Oder, a new force to the victorious army.

"The regiments of the interior must be completed, and present to our enemies a reserve to fly wherever the voice of his majesty shall call it.

"It is the interest of the people and arms that their strength shall be such, as to allow his majesty to be sparing of their bravery, and that by causing more soldiers to march to battle, less may lose their lives in obtaining the victory.

"The war which England has paid for the renewal and prolongation of, is more an ordinary war; it must not finish with the autumn of the present year, to recommence in the autumn of the next.

"His majesty wishes to spare his people and allies this periodical renewal of battles wherein glory and triumphs are always purchased by losses and sacrifices.

"He has declared to Europe his intention of securing to it a general and lasting peace.

"It is from the midst of the continent which England wishes to place in a state of conflagration, that henceforth a terrible war will be made against her.

"It is by applying to her on all the European shores, the principles she has applied on all seas, that the emperor wishes to bring her back to the ancient principles of the right of persons and civilized nations.

"It is by exiling the vessels of England from all the coasts wherever his imperial and royal majesty shall carry his victorious arms and avenging justice, that he will punish the English ministry for the guilty refusal of giving peace to the world, usefully and honourably for England, the peace which the world sighs for.

"These are the noble thoughts, the generous designs which his majesty confides to the senate and nation, the execution of which requires the concurrence of all wills.—It is to secure its realization the conscription of 1807 is from this day, to be called out fourteen months since that of 1806.

"This measure, as extraordinary as the circumstance under which Europe finds itself, will produce similar and still happier effects than last year.

"The conscripts who have marched, have helped to conquer kingdoms; those who are about following them will help to conquer peace.

"You will draw near for them the period of devotedness and battles; they will draw near for their country the period of peace and gratitude.

"The following is the project of senatus consultum which his majesty has ordered me to present to you."

The senate referred the examination of the project of senatus consultum, and the report to be made on his majesty's message, to a commission which was appointed during the course of the sitting, consisting of the senators Lacede, Garat, Barthelmy, Valence, and Perce.

On the 4th December, this commission made to the senate, by the organ of the senator Lacede, the following report:

Monsieur—Senators,
"You have referred to your special commission, the message sent by his imperial and royal majesty from his head quarters at Berlin, and which has been communicated to you by his serene highness the prince arch-chancellor of the empire.

"You have in like manner referred to your special commission, the imperial decree, together with the two reports of the minister for foreign affairs which were annexed to his majesty's message, and the project of senatus consultum relative to the military conscription of 1807, and which I am going to read.

"Your commission has been unanimously of opinion, that the senate ought to hasten to adopt the project of the senatus consultum which is proposed to you, and the motives of which, so well developed by the orators of government, are laid down in so admirable a manner in the message of his imperial and royal majesty.

"It is also conceived that it could not better second the sentiments which this memorable message has inspired us with, than by proposing to offer up to his imperial majesty, in an address of which the commission has appointed me to submit to you the project, the homage of your profound devotedness, and of your warm and respectful gratitude.

"I have then the honor to propose to the senate, in the name of its special commission, to adopt,

"First, the project of senatus consultum, relative to the military conscription.

"Secondly, the project of decree as well as the address which I am going to have the honor to present to you."

On this report, the senate, in the same sitting, adopted the project of Senatus consultum: it in like manner adopted the project of decree and the address proposed by its commission.

(These two documents will be published when his majesty to whom they have been sent, shall have ordered them to be printed.)

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1807.

Extract of a letter from our correspondent at Washington, dated February 13, 1807.

"Our minister at Paris, with his accustomed attention to the interest of his country, has called upon the government of France for the necessary explanations of the true intent and meaning of the decree of Bonaparte of Nov. 21st, as it may relate to the commerce of the U. States; & I have the happiness of informing you that he has received, through the Minister of Marine, the most satisfactory assurances, in due form, that the Decree will not, in any manner, disturb the friendly commercial regulations that have subsisted between the United States and France, under the convention of September 30, 1800.

We are informed that the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that a Writ of Habeas Corpus shall issue in the case of Bollman. In this opinion, it seems, the Court was divided. Marshall, Wallington, and Livingston were for, and Chafe and Johnson against the issuing of the writ.

Extract of a letter from our correspondent at Washington, dated February 14.

"On Monday will be brought before the Supreme court of the U. States, upon a writ of Habeas Corpus, Bollman and Swartwout, to ascertain the powers of the government as to them; and, on the same day, are expected, letters from the westward that will ascertain the powers of the militia, as to their principal."

From Salem.
Capt. Felt informs us, that the inhabitants of Bordeaux appear to be dejected, from the complete stagnation of business: they have scarcely any commerce, and great numbers of vessels lay rotting in the mud.—Under these circumstances, the brilliant successes of their Emperor appeared to interest them but little; though they are strongly impressed with the idea, that he will accomplish whatever he undertakes, and that he will yet conquer England.—Salem Gazette

Gen. Andreoffi is appointed French Ambassador at Vienna.—Gen. Mack is sentenced to be publicly degraded, and to be imprisoned for life.—The King of Prussia, at the last date, was at Konigsburg.—The Emperor of Russia had invited him to reside at Petersburg.—Accounts from Hamburg state, that innumerable bankruptcies had taken place there.

(Boston Gazette.)

The sch'r Betsey, Capt. Brown, arrived at Marblehead, on Saturday last, in 47 days from Nantz, and 40 from Charante.—We could not learn that she brought any political information. A person who came passenger, reports, that the ship Diana, Capt. Noble, was detained at the Isle of Rhea.

SLAVE TRADE.

The friends of the oppressed African race will be pleased to learn, that during the course of the Elections in various parts of the kingdom of Great Britain, the popular sentiment has been very strongly expressed against the continuance of that traffic in the human flesh, which, to the disgrace of that enlightened country, is still permitted, if not encouraged by the laws.

In Yorkshire this feeling was so general, that Mr. Fawkes, in offering himself to represent that extensive and populous county in parliament, felt it necessary to make a public declaration of his opinions on this subject in an advertisement, dated Farnley-Hall, October 25, 1806.

"The Slave Trade," he observes, "had my deepest abhorrence, nor will I yield in strenuousness however I might in efficacy, to the patron of its abolition; Mr. Willibrodus himself. No gentlemen should, your suffrages place me in the distinguished station to which I aspire, you shall never have occasion on this topic to reproach the tardiness of your representative. I here solemnly pledge myself to exert every effort in my power both in and out of parliament for the purpose of disburdening this nation of the sin of that abominable traffic.

The same gentleman at his nomination at York thus concluded his address to the Freeholders.—"I stand before this meeting an independent country gentleman, connected with no party, fettered by no pledge. I beg pardon, I have given one promise, from which I shall never swerve; that of using my endeavors to tear from our statute book that bloody page which authorises us to trample upon the first rights of our fellow creatures, and to deal in human flesh."

The director of the mint, has reported to congress, that during the last year there was coined 64,093 half-eagles, and 1,616 quarter-eagles, making together 65,709 pieces of gold coins, and amounting to dollars 324,305.

That during the same period, there was coined 839,576 half-dollars, and 1,061,234 quarter-dollars, making together 1,045,700 pieces of silver coins, and amounting to dollars 471,319.

That during the same period also, there was coined 348,000 cents, and 356,000 half-cents, making together 704,000 pieces of copper coins, and amounting to dollars 5,260.

Extract of a letter from Bordeaux, to a gentleman in New-York, received by the Emeline.

"You will see by the file of L'Echo, the astonishing feats of our emperor, whose last decree has struck deep into the commercial heart. This prohibition of importation to the continent and England will, I fear, be severely felt in America by the return of bills from London, for which the funds were to go from France. It would appear that the law is intended to meet a full execution as accounts from Paris, this morning, state, that a house attempted remitting to London, via Lisbon, the letter was opened and burned with the bills it contained."
