

From the same to the same, by the ship Brutus. LAGUNA, July 28, 1807.

SIR, "I wrote you on the 25th instant, and requested you to publish the facts stated in that letter; they being of such a nature, and immediately under the eye of this government, that I think they cannot plead ignorance."

"A similar affair to the one I mentioned, happened yesterday. An American schooner being about two leagues to windward, and baffled with small winds, (her colours very distinguishable) at 4 P. M. a boat from one of those picarons departed full of men from this port in quest of her. I particularly watched his motions, and at 20 minutes before 6 I saw him board her, and no doubt he has carried her off, as there is no appearance of her this morning. You may rest assured that any thing of this nature shall not pass unnoticed, and that I will give you the facts from time to time and request their publicity, that my countrymen may not go unarmed, and be any longer the dupes of those piratical rascals."

Edward Livingston of New-Orleans, has offered proposals for publishing "The History of the Civil Law," which he means to translate, in ten volumes octavo, at ten dollars a volume.

On Thursday night, about 12 o'clock, the city was alarmed with the cry of fire, which was discovered to proceed from the dry good store of Messrs. Morrison & Nixon, William street. By the spirited exertions of the firemen, the flames were soon extinguished. The fire was discovered by a watchman who was passing the place by accident. He perceived through the key hole an extraordinary light, and on examination, he found the store to be on fire.

Mr. Fulton's new invented Steam Boat arrived at this city yesterday from Albany, having performed her passage to and from that place in a little better than four days.

TRANSLATION. Extract of a letter from JOSEPH YSNARDY, Esq. to his correspondent in this city, Consul of the United States of America at Cadix, the 8th June, 1807.

SIR, Although I had long ago made up my mind not to waste my time nor my paper in announcing to the public the sentiments, as well moral as political, by which I have always been animated; yet, as it is true that men of real sense in the United States of America do not give credit to trifling reports, nor to impertinent insinuations, more particularly when the labels are anonymous and the clamour of a malicious tendency; and as I have to live but a short time in this world, and am in expectation of seeing the duties of this Consular office discharged by another (when my merits only will suffice), yet in justice to myself and to the public decorum, and from respect to my friends in that country, I think it just to summon my calumniator, let him be who he will, (notwithstanding I do really believe him not far distant from me, and that all he has caused to be published is false and of course unjust,) to prove the contrary, and I will institute upon him the challenge that by law he deserves to suffer. In a few words, I will satisfy the public, and thereby remove disadvantageous impressions that my enemies may have created against me with their malicious fables.

In a letter sent from this place on the 15th December, 1806, and published, it was intimated that at last, to furnish the wishes of our worthy President, I had taken a house in this city, as if I had not had one before that time. It is well known and notorious, that since the year 1768, I have kept house in this city living under the same roof with Mr. Francis D. Hegulux, with whom I had mercantile concerns until the year 1794, without becoming a bankrupt, and always transacted my affairs with honour. In 1794, I took the house in San Alexander street No. 78, owned by Don Juan Vico, which I quitted in 1797, and went to live in another in the same street No. 18, owned by Don Francis Alvarez Campana, from which I removed in the month of October, to another in Aduana Vieja street, No. 2, belonging to Senores Palau, as appears by the Mercurio Almanack of this city, shewing that during 39 years past my residence has been in this city, and that at the same time I have kept my own house at Rota since the year 1760. Rota is only eight miles distant from Cadix by sea, and by land through Puerto Santa Maria 12 miles; and from my house at Rota, I can see Cadix and its Bay. I have also a view of the sea to the distance of 20 miles; so that if Rota was the place of my abode, it would be as well as Cadix being a port belonging to my Consular district. Although there are in Rota ferry boats going almost hourly to Cadix, I keep one of my own capitanly ready at a minute's notice for my business; and for this reason I can stay a certain part of the year in my country place for the benefit of my health, without prejudice to my Consular duty; besides that I have a good Agent to act in my absence, who never leaves the Consular office, and myself signing daily and necessary documents; and if I chuse to put myself to the trouble and expence without prejudice to my office, what are the faults of which I am so falsely accused? With this my declaration, I also contradict every lie published in the year 1803, of having absented myself 50 miles from Cadix which was intended only to deceive the public.

In the same publication of the 15th of December 1806, in the very face of truth, it is made a subject of complaint that the port of Algeiras was entirely neglected, when I had appointed at that place as my agent ad interim Don Pedro Parillo, who is fulfilling his duty as well as he is able, and as a man who has no salary for his services, nor even American commissions, because the few vessels going there are taken from him by any one who solicits them; his services are only to oblige me out of a particular respect he has for me; and altho' I have represented to the government, since the beginning of this war, the necessity of appointing to that place a man of their own confidence, nothing has been done; and what can the ablest man do, when the supercargoes and masters of vessels abandon the property, provided their freight is paid to them, without thinking to appoint their attorney, or leaving money to appeal? Notwithstanding this, I have myself caused appeals to be entered officially, giving information of it to Mr. Young, agent at Madrid, and by so doing I have fulfilled my duty; and as to the prizes brought to this port the concerned have empowered others to defend their property, and of course no assistance of mine has been solicited, although I have seen many of them wrongly conducted, and left for want of proper judgment, yet I could do nothing. Thus these evils will continue until the public is apprized. And let it be understood, that after a suit has been improperly commenced it is not an easy thing to prove the justice of it; and the Consul being restrained from taking notice of it without authority from the owners, would render himself responsible for the consequences. Besides that, they expose the public representative, as he is always the last person they consult with after their affairs are embarrassed.

I write this letter from Rota, where I came yesterday from Cadix. I think proper to make to you this remark, as I do not wish it should be said I conceal my departure, nor that I come here secretly. Without any other tidings, I pray God to keep you many years. JOSEPH YSNARDY.

The mail of yesterday furnished us with Richmond papers to the 21st inst. inclusive. The Enquirer of that date contains the preliminary speech of Mr. Hay on opening the prosecution. It is very long and very able. It will be given in regular order. On Tuesday, the 18th General Eaton delivered his testimony, in a clear and distinct manner. It is substantially the same as the public have already seen in his former deposition. We shall publish it however together with all the proceedings in the case in due course, to enable the public to see the whole grounds on which Burr has been implicated of treason. The hours of sitting for the court are from nine till four o'clock. The Enquirer says—

Mr. Eaton was followed by Commodore Thomas Truxton, who was introduced to show the intentions and the turn of mind of the prisoner, about the beginning of the winter of 1805-6. The Messrs. Morgans were then called to carry on the regular chain of events, but one of them being absent, Peter Taylor, (Blannerhassett's gardener) was introduced; to prove the overt act on Blannerhassett's island.

On Wednesday, the examination proceeded. Col. G. Morgan, Gen. J. Morgan and Thomas Morgan, (the father and two sons) from the neighborhood of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, were introduced also to show the turn of mind of the prisoner, about the latter end of August, 1806; when he visited Col. Morgan's house on his way to the western country. They were followed by Jacob Albright, who had been a workman on Blannerhassett's island, and who deposed as to the overt act; and William Love, who had been H. Blannerhassett's groom. In the course of Love's examination, the important question was suggested, how far testimony could be introduced for the purpose of proving facts without the district of Virginia; which question was reserved for a subsequent discussion. The examination on this day was closed by the testimony of Mr. Dudley Woodbridge, who had been H. Blannerhassett's partner in a store at Marietta, (O.) and who gave a particular history of the building of the boats on the Muskingum and the laying in the provisions.

On Thursday, Mr. Burr observed, that the nature of the overt act had been seen from the evidence before the court; and that the prosecutors had even acknowledged that they should not prevent the overt act by actual hostilities and he himself was not present at the time this overt act was said to have been committed. If they were mistaken in these points; if it was shown that they had grossly mistaken the decision of the supreme court, it were better to save the time of the court, the expence and inconvenience, by arresting the progress of his prosecution. Some discussion ensued upon the propriety of taking up the argument, which was waved for the present; when Simon Poole, who had been on the Ohio side of the river opposite to Blannerhassett's island on the evening and night, when the boats departed; and Maurice Bellamy and Edmund P. Dana, who were at the same time on the island; were respectively examined. The examination was then suspended, to make way for an argument on one of the points suggested by Mr. Burr. Mr. Wickham opened the argument & spoke 4 hours, until 4 o'clock, when the court adjourned. The discussion will be resumed next day.

The two following appear to be the propositions supported by the prisoners' counsel: 1. That the accused not having been present at the time of the overt act, no evidence can be adduced to prove his connection with that overt act. 2. That an overt act not being proved, the prosecutor entirely fails.

FOR THE AMERICAN. FEDERALISTS THE ENEMIES AND BONAPARTE THE FRIEND OF G. BRITAIN.

Oh! vanity of vanities! all is vanity. How often are we disappointed in the result of our most earnest endeavors! The good and pious federalists of America, with the most innocent and amiable intention towards their good friends, the people of Great Britain, on whose safety they most religiously think that ours depends! are likely to be highly instrumental in precipitating that venerable nation into the most serious difficulties! when at the same time, Bonaparte, with intentions diametrically opposite to those attributed to the feds, is doing more for her than she could, with the aid of all her potent allies, effect for herself!

This you will say is a paradox; but it requires no great depth of syllogistic reasoning, to make it appear as plain as the plainest problem in Euclid. It cannot be denied that the conduct of the federalists amongst us has been calculated to, and really made that nation conclude that our political salvation depends on theirs; and consequently, that their present exertions to oppose and humble France, entitles them to no small degree of indulgence on our part; such, for instance, as all good housewives allow in well regulated families, where their allies, the cats, destroy their enemies, the rats.

Where is the good dame of this description that can grudge to such friends such acknowledgments of the milk-pan now and then. And although they should bite and scratch us occasionally when we are defending the cream, we ought to put up with it in consideration, not only of the services they have rendered, but of those they mean to confer.

In this manner do these great statesmen argue, and contend that we must indulge these good friends, and even if they should transcend the bounds of moderation, we must not complain, because Great Britain being omnipotent, has nothing to apprehend from a feeble republic, conducted by a pacific administration. Thus have they encouraged that nation to commit acts of hostility and outrage on a people by whose commerce they have for many years past pocketed at least twenty millions of dollars annually, exclusive of spoilation.

Hence I conclude that they are de facto the enemies of Great Britain. Bonaparte on the contrary, in order to obtain for his nation that portion of the commerce of the world, to which he thinks them entitled, has, by his law of conscription completely defeated that purpose. He has totally disqualified his subjects for either commerce or manufactures for a period of perhaps fifty years to come. He has made them a nation of soldiers, and mechanics or merchants they can never be more than by halves. Therefore, if Great Britain can obtain peace, they will benefit by his policy in the highest degree, and I must acknowledge, what they have not yet—that Bonaparte is their friend.

DEATH, yesterday morning, deprived this city of one of the most promising members of our community. Mr. JACOB NORRIS, in the 26th year of his age, distinguished for the good qualities of his heart and the urbanity of his disposition no less than by an assiduous attention to the duties of a respectable mercantile concern, fell a victim to that unrelenting monarch, whose hand spares neither age nor sex, and who is deaf alike to the voice of friendship and the lamentations of consanguinity. In the prime of life, a pleasing prospect in view, with affectionate relatives, and friends sincerely devoted to his service, he has dropped into the grave, leaving a melancholy void in the hearts of all those who knew his worth and justly appreciated his virtues.
