The Baltimore Sun of 1st says: May 13th has been set for taking up the case i the Criminal Court of Baltimore city. A demurrer will be filed for the defense and argued before Judge Stewart. A demurrer concedes the truth o the facts set forth in the indictment, but claims tha they do not constitute a crime under the laws the State. Among the points that will be made that the law defining embezzlement does not apply to a State Treasurer. It will also be contended that the acts described in the indictments do not con stitute larceny. If the demurrer is sustained t all the counts of the two indictments that wi end the case and Archer will go free. If any of the counts are ruled good by the Court Archer will i ried on the good counts before a jury or before the udge alone, as the accused may elect. caused by a junction of warm and cold curcover the loss in glass alone. Every glazer in

There is no trouble in getting the ordinary sizes of glass, but large and fine glass are diffi-

For the lovers of peace and order, and for all who are interested in the world's prosperity, the present time is regarded as a very ominous date. It is one that has long been anticipated with a great deal of apprehension by all intelligent persons who note the progress of the ending contest between labor and capital, in which the fate of the whole civilized world | John W. Bowen, low seems to be involved. The time when foreigners and barbarians were the worst enemies of civilized people has ong since passed away, so that now for the Robert Swemm, nation's, as well as for each human heart, the | John Buck, foes most to be dreaded are those of one's own cousehold. For years past the fires of dissatisfaction have been smouldering throughout Joshua A. Parsons, Europe, with occasional open outbreaks; and William B. Cockey, that the same dangerous spirit is at work in George E. French, Robert Corbett. our own country, is evinced by the serious troubles that are continually occurring in al the cities of our land.

But most people seem to think that these things will all work themselves right without any aid, if only they are allowed to take their natural course. Though, perhaps, nothing of much consequence is done hecause nobody knows what to do in the case. Geo. M. Fultz, Reuben H. Wineholf With over three hundred strikes reported to Bradstreet's Agency, for the first four mouths of this year, as against two hundred and some for the corresponding time last year, we can see, hovever, that volcanic eruption must be inevitable, if things go or at this rate. Prince Bismarck is a wise old soul, as well as a wily one, and he predicts that this business is going to give the world a great deal of trouble yet. He says that "antagonism between employers and em; loyed is a natural law, and a necessity of human .progress." That progress would cease should men ever become satisfied." And that "content is only possible ither with slavery, as in Africa, or where munificent nature does not ask man to work." So that, if we reduce the question to its lowest terms, it appears to be the necessity for men to work, which is really responsible for the world's present difficulties. And the sentence that man should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, which we are accustomed to expound as containing great blessings, carries with it the penalties of a curse, after all. Thus affording us another striking example of the greatly mixed nature of things. It requires, however, no prophet's eye to see

Moores. season, and the success with which they may be temporarily suppressed, the great question at issue in this, the greatest issue of all modern history, is the final settlement of the problem as to the right of majorities to rule | John Halpin the world. It is really this theory which is to be put to the test by the and nothing but the decision of this question can settle them. A violent manifesto of some of the German agitators asserts that "the worktographs certain interested "lookers on" during men are the dominant force, and they ought to overturn and renovate society." This is exactly what our theories concerning majorities have been proclaiming to the world for the last century; and the time must come when they will be put to the proof. Then we shall see what will be the outcome. And only then; for the majority never has ruled us yet. In the matter of strikes and similar Baltimore appears to be considerably in the background, as it is habitually accused of being in so many other respects. But nobody can reproach us for not having made an ambitious record in our great hail-storm of last Sunday afternoon. The hail-stones "as large as hens' eggs," which other places sometimes boast, are vouched for by good authority here; and the fact that they not only demolished skylights, but actually went through tin roofs, proves that the din the made was something quite different from theatrical thunder. The windows of whole streets, all over town, looked as though the city had been raked, fore and aft, by volleys of musketry, and the damage is estimated at many thousands of dollars. It seems a little odd that our churches should have been the places most viciously attacked by the storm, and so many of their beautiful stained windows reduced to atoms. A few ages ago supernatural agencies would probably have been held responsible for this sort of sacrilege, and the consternation and panic into which our juverile church goers were thrown i course, we now know very well that storms are only disturbances of atmospheric conditions, produced by the laws of Nature. And as Nature has no intelligent power behind it, and pobody is responsible for its activities, why, to be sure, they mean nothing whatever. Which is a very comfortable doctrine, indeed For, otherwise, in this emergency, we might be driven to inquire whether such an attack upon our churches might not indicate that the powers above are displeased with our style and brand of piety. And this might involve results that would not be altogether aggreeable. Those old-fashioned gods and godesses whose tastes people had to be always considering. must have been a very uncomfortable sort of beings to have around! It was a masterstroke of policy for mankind to get rid of But, by the way, it would seem that the world has not quite cut loose from the domain of the supernatural even yet. For at the meeting of the American branch of the Theosophical Society, at Chicago, last week, there was read a communication from the famous Madame Blavatsky, the founder of the order, in which she virtually charges many of the good people of Baltimore city and county with deal-ng in supernaturalisms. The reporter says that the private secretary of this high priestess of occultism delivered the message in which "Madame Blavatsky warned them all against the results of the present germinating in man of the latent sychic and occult powers into such forms as 'Christian Science," "Mind Cure," &c , and charged them to "understand, once for all, that there is nothing spiritual or divine in any of these manifestations." But religion seems to be growing a serious sort of business in these troublesome times; as the Presbytery of Baltimore, in session here last week, afforded ample demonstration. Though these redoubtable champions of a martyr making faith had such dreadful questions to deal with that it is not wonderful they had hard time of it. The arts of black magic would have been trifling subjects in comparison. Think of any body of men baving to decide not only whether the Pope is anti-Christ, and all Catholics idolators; but being called upon settle the case of infants and heathen condemned to everlasting perdition; and to pro nounce that for the glory of their Creator certain angels and men are predestined and foreparauged or diminished !
