SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1901:

BEGINNING OF TWO CENTURIES. The New York Times prints clips from newspapers published on January 1, 1801, which indicate that 100 years ago our forefathers were discussing the same problem which puzzled some of our wiseacres 100 years later. The Connecticut Courrant of January 1, 1801, dropped into poetry, and, in an "Ode to the Century," observed that "Full many a calculating head has racked its brains, its ink has shed, to prove by metaphysics fine a hundred means but ninety-nine." The Courrant saicastically advised these scientific sages to "collect your light a few more ages Perhaps as swell the vast amount, a century hence you'll learn to count." On the other hand. the Porcupine fiercely asserted that | FOR THE PEOPLE AND WITH THE PEOPLE 1799 was the last year of the century Honest in Motive. and declared that "whoever denies this has no more brains then an oyster.' A correspondent of the Columbian Sentinel, a journal published at Boston, seems to have been no ordinary prophet. In the Sentinel of January 1, 1801, he observed that oyster.' A correspondent of the of January 1, 1801, he observed that "if we could be indulged with a peep upón earth a hundred years hence we

Undoubtedly, and if the editor of the Gazette were with us now even he, sage and philosopia i that he was, would open his eyes with astonishment when he contrasted the Maryland of the twentieth centur, with Maryland 100 years ago. In would indeed be a glorious "entertainment" to him. That he wanted to live another century is quite est dent from the concluding sentence of his new century editorial in 1801. "I imagine," he writes, "it would be a much more desirable object to live till the year 1901, because a greater change in the affairs of the world seems to be promised." Human nature has not changed since his day. Probably most of the people in the world who have found life worth living are of the same mind as the editor of the Gazette about the desirability of remaining another cen tury on this globe. And 2001 the world's inhabitants will doubless be wishing that they could tarry until 2101. It was ever thus, "Man never is, but always to be blest."

According to the Nashville, Tenn American, of December 20, sugar plantation owners in Honolulu arnow clamoring for Southern negroes to work on their lands, and expect to move some 10,000 negroes from the South during the next few months. They are organizing the negroes into colonies, it says, giving them free transportation to the far-away country and guaranteeing them lucrative work. The first of the negroes from this section started for Honolulu last peril. night. The party was composed of thirty-live families. The Honoluly fever is spreading among the negroes of this section, and it would not be surprising if there is a great exodus of Tennessee negroes to the land of few weeks. The negroes are taking their families with them and seem happy.
