of their resources and services in various stages of the project. of agencies, government officials and individual citizens have given work so far. of the combined holdings of official records of the states. Hundreds posed. The result represents, with few exceptions, contributions eight states was visited and a total of 120,000 feet of film was ex-During the course of this work each of the forty-numbered chronologically by states. Within each state jurisdiction are serviced to users. The scheme also provides for collateral and terminal supplements. scheme allows for a two-way grouping of the microfilms into separequirements of the various research interests as the microfilms lettered subject classes and, it is believed, will adequately meet rate state collections or into a nation-wide collection of any of the the materials are arranged under the eleven lettered classes. This tematically organized on individual reels of film and the reels are a simple classification scheme and the physical arrangement of the filmed material under that scheme. The second phase of the project involved the working out of The materials are sysquire analysis of the materials and coordination of information contask of making the microfilms readily available to all who desire to States might be prepared. This third phase of the project will reobtain a better understanding of the behavior of our free institutions tained in the findings. Its completion must await the more urgent have been kept from which a guide to the use of the Records of the of government. During the collection and editorial phases of the project notes