

A moderate and safe Expedient, &c.

If it please the Parliament to take the condition of the Roman Catholics into serious consideration, they may, perhaps, finde cause to give them liberty of conscience in England; or as much toleration, at least, as people of that profession have in Holland (which is little lesse then a liberty of conscience) although that State might perhaps finde more reason, then the State of England hath, to be jealous of such persons: but by experience, the Hollanders finde that way to succeed well with them. Neverthelessse, in case the Parliament shall not think fit to do so, they may be pleased to give to so many of them as will accept thereof, free & publick leave to transplant themselves, families, and estates, into Mariland, a Province in America, above 3000 miles distant from England, upon these ensuing considerations, both of the reasons for their departure, and of such encouragements as are requisite to enduce those of that profession here, voluntarily to transplant themselves thither.

In regard they are conceived dangerous persons
