LIFE AND ETERNITY.

Life is the veil that hides eternity.
Youth strives in vain to pierce it, but the eye of age may catch, through chinks which Time has worn,
Faint glimpses of that awful world beyond Which Death's last reveals. This life may be Compared to a tree's foliage; in its prime,
A mass of dark, impenetrable shade,
It veils the distant view; but day by day,
As autumn's breath is felt, the falling leaves, Opening a passage for the doubtful light, Exhibit to the eager more and more Of that which is beyond—till winter comes,
And through the skeleton branches we behold
The clear, blue light of day!

The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed, Lets in the light through chinks that time has made.

INDIANS.

Alas for them! their day is o'er,
Their fires are out on hill and shore;
No more for them the wild deer bounds,
The pile is on their hunting grounds;
The pale man's ax rings through their woods,
The pale man's sail skins off their flocks;
Their children—look, by power opposed, Beyond the mountains of the west,
Their children go to die.

FAITH.

Better trust all and be deceived,
And weep that trust and that deceiving, Than doubt one heart that, if believed,
Had blessed one's life with true believing.

O, in this mocking world too fast
The doubting fiend o'ertakes our youth; Faster he cheats the last Than lose the blessed hope of truth.

Faithful Words.

No class can indict such martyrdom on their associates as those who have given to the habit of reminding others of their failings and peculiarities. You are never safe with such a person. When you have done your very best to please, and are feeling kindly and patiently out will pop some bitter speech or sneer, but too well aimed to be understood. Setting aside the unkindness of the habit, and looking at it entirely from a worldly point of view, it does not seem to say disagreeable things to those who have an equal share will in the end recoil upon ourselves.

When you expect Nature to convert a bad boy into a good man, you expect a miracle of her; and Nature never performs miracles. You might as well beat a young sapling to the wind which beats it away, and hope that it will be a straight, well formed tree when it is an old one.

You are aware that it is a tender young tree which yields to the wind, and that and that every year is more difficult to straighten it. Make the boy a good one if you desire him to be a good man—honest, if you hope to have him stand upright before his fellowmen.

The reasons of unhappiness, big and little, lie in ignorance, and therefore in the violation of the inevitable conditions of happiness. Men seek happiness not as an education, but as a goal end, and do not seek it harmoniously. They do not seek it in moderation. They do not seek it as that which has accomplishment and fulfillment in another life. Therefore their condition is not such that they can be as happy on earth as they ought to be. Their happiness is partial, it is selfish, and it is secular.

The things in which we are the most active, and which touch us every day on all sides, are those in which we are most in the spring, and the substantial nature of which consists in borrowing and lending; and there is no other part of a man's life in which he needs to be more sedulously guarded than his essential manliness, his honor, his honesty, his integrity in dealing with his fellowmen.

Like flakes of snow that fall unper-ceived upon the ground, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another. As the snow gathers together so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change; no single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character.

The true spirit of religion cheers as well as composes the soul; it banishes all levity of behavior, all vicious inclination, and in its place it fills mind with purity, serenity, uninterrupted cheerfulness, and a habitual inclination to please others as well as be pleased in itself.
