A Woman's Statement.
They get into comment about the money made by people who earn their living on the stage. Of course they differed; people can't argue satisfactorily unless they do differ. But here is the opinion of a woman who was once on the stage, who was considered popular, who was clever enough in her work to get applause and praise, who presunably earned more than the average actress, and yet who is content with her present life:
"When I take out the money paid for gowns which were useless except on the stage, when I make allowance for traveling expenses, hotel bills, weeks in which few performers earn anything; when I take into account engagements which could not for many reasons be satisfactorily looking up when I foot up the salaries which sometimes in my early work I never received, and when I estimate the thousand and one little expenses which were then necessary, I consider that for practical purposes I am practically nothing but a living, and I worked very hard, you must understand. Now it isn't necessary to tell you what my salary was or what my husband's salary now is, but his earnings are less than mine were. But we two live much better in his smaller salary than I alone could live on my bigger salary. We have a pretty home and all that we need to be happy. We save a little money too. So I suppose that a fair answer as to what one makes on the stage. There are a great many circumstances to be considered."
--New York Tribune.

Ten Anxious Minutes.
Captain Anderson rescued the crew of a Dutch schooner from a wild part of the island of Formosa, after firing upon some of the natives. His return is thus described in "A Cruise in an Opium Clipper": "Our way to the island was through a narrow pass, and as I entered it at the head of my men, for a second my heart almost ceased to beat at the startling sight that met my gaze.
"The pass was lined on both sides with frenzied-looking natives, armed with pole axes, spears, huge knives and many other death-dealing instruments.
"Although I was taken that aback by the sight, some instinct carried me forward with a cool, starting eye, which seemed to curb the revengeful spirit of the natives.
"On arriving at the other end of the defile I stopped, turned round, and saw all the men safely through, and then told them in unmistakable English to make a clean sweep of the island, while I brought up the rear at a sharp pace as soon as I had got a little way from the entrance of the pass, so that the natives might not see us in too great a hurry.
"How they let us through without touching us, or even making a motion making a motion toward us, passes my comprehension."

Letters That Never Came.
They tell a funny story of a man who rented a box in the postoffice white-ago.
He appears to have been new to the business and failed to get the hang of the thing. After a month or so he called on one of the postoffice officials and began to kick about the box. "The box thing never had any mail in it," was his complaint.
"I have looked in that box every day since I rented it and it hasn't had a thing in it the whole time. I even addressed a letter to each of the seven white-agoes." The two took a look at the box and the postoffice man inquired if the box renter had ever opened his box. Why, no, of course not. Couldn't he see that there wasn't anything in it?
"Of course it is of no use," he had forgotten the number of his box though it was on his receipt, and had been watching and swearing over it until he found a stack of mail in his box at last and went away feeling small enough to crowd inside of it.--Buffalo Express.

The Wooden Indian.
I used to live in Spain, and afterward in the West Indies, before I came to the States. I met the wooden Indian long before I came to this country. I have been asked before where the wooden Indian got his start. I only know what I have heard about him in the Old World. There was an adventurer named Rutz who left his old city, Barcelona, and came to Virginia 300 years ago. When he returned he executed the wooden Indian in a rude way, as a type of the sort of animal he had met in the New World, and the figure was set up in front of a shop where wine was sold. Finally it became a sort of trademark. There were smokers in those days and they assembled around the Indian. And the wooden Indian is now seen in front of nearly every cigar store.
--Interview in Chicago Tribune.

Waited Until the Child Was Safe.
An interesting little war story has Governor Jones, of Alabama, for its hero. At the time Gordon was residing Sherman's advance, Jones, then a staff captain, was delivering a message from his chief when he saw a little child, clad only in night clothes, hiding in terror behind a frame house in the direct range of the bullets from each army. Jones rode forward, took the child on his horse and galloped back with her to the Confederate line. When the Union forces saw the act they ceased firing, and there was an impromptu cessation of hostilities until the child had been carried to point of safety.--Charleston News and Courier.

All Explained.
Colonel Bilderwick (to his wife's dressmaker)--How is it that my tailor never calls for his account under six months, but you want your money at once?
Dressmaker--You forget, sir, the number of months it takes to make the alterations on your wife's gowns, and they are devised.--Clothes and Furnisher.

Admitted the Facts.
Newspaper editors have to be very careful in opening their columns for statements. But aware that the Dr.
Miles Medical Company are responsible, we make room for the following testimonial from R. McDougall, Auburn, Ind., who for two years noticed a stoppage or skipping of the pulse, his left side got so tender he could not lie on it, his heart fluttered, he was alarmed, went to different doctors, found no relief, but one bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure cured him. The elegant box "New and Startling Facts," free at Daley's Drug Store. It tells all about Heart and Nervous Diseases and many wonderful cures.
