SAD DISTURBER OF DIGNITY.

A Long Travelling Trailing Behind a Man Bound to Make Him Ridiculous.

Among the little things that detract from a man's dignified appearance, such as his necktie crawling up to his ear, and cuff showing two or three inches more than the other, or his vest buttoned wrong, quite the funniest is a great long raveling trailing over him. One rather expects to find a woman covered with scraps and ravelings—trinkets of her housewifery—but can scarce repress a smile when a man's dignity is marred by such evidences of domesticity.

I attended a lecture some time ago that was really an eloquent masterpiece. I sat near the lecturer so that I might see every expression of his intellectual face, and I am sure that I should have thoroughly enjoyed the address had it not been that a long white thread dangled on his coat sleeve. When he became earnestly enthusiastic, the string swung around and vibrated, and when he grew pathetic it waved slowly back and forth as if emphasizing the pathos. I tried to pay attention, and I looked at the man's face and endeavored to concentrate my mind on the subject, but as soon as I looked away from the raveling I was consumed with the desire to see what it was doing then, and before I realized it I was watching the thread and its motions as if entranced.

You have probably had experience with some little thing that wholly distracted your attention from a subject upon which you are anxious to concentrate your mind, and realize to what a degree that thing was spoiled for me by a silly little raveling.
Have you never been one of a company that seemed almost convulsed at the sight of a man with one of those innocent and harmless little threads on his clothes? A whole row of people at the National the other night laughed and littered and got into a regular glee because an individual had a raveling on his coat which he had his parson's fringe of hair and trailing gracefully over his bald spot. Yes, there is something inhumanly funny about a raveling and a man when they are combined.—Washington Star.

A TREACHEROUS MEMORY.

An Absentminded Man Who Sometimes Forgets His Own Name.

A day or two ago the most forgetful man in Chatham went into Sam Kelly's grocery, and when he stepped up to the counter he looked around and scratched his head in a most perplexed way and said:
"Sam, I came in for something, and for the life of me I cannot remember what it is."
"Perhaps it is molasses?" said Sam.
"No," replied the forgetful man; "it cannot be molasses, I don't know because I didn't bring a jug with me."
"Is it a bottle of Worcestershire sauce?"
"No, because we never use anything in that line but catsup."
"It may be extract of vanilla."
"No, I'm pretty sure it isn't that."
"No, it isn't extract of anything. By goodness! It makes me no more to the fact I cannot remember a thing five minutes.
Now, what in the world have I come in for anyhow?"
"Are you sure it isn't French mustard you want?"
"Positive, because I kept repeating the name of the thing all the way up the road, and it didn't slip my mind until I attempted to get for it. Yes, it is something to find out what it is for fear of being laughed at. I know it isn't canned soup or mixed pickles or a broom."
"Is it a package of split peas for soup?"
"No, it isn't."
"Is it a jar of pickled walnuts or a box of sardines?"
"Neither of them."
"Is it a loaf of bread?"
"That's it, Sam; that's it. A loaf of bread. I know we'd hit it before long.
This poor memory of mine is so poor that sometimes I forget what my name is and have to go and look in the family Bible to find it."
And he departed, smiling, with the bread.—Amsterdam Democrat.

Answers For Supper.

Sir Charles Napier hated a man who had not an answer ready for him. He once asked Richard Burton, the explorer, how many bridges there were in London.
Richard, knowing his folly, answered without hesitation, "Two hundred and twenty-nine thousand and ten, Sir Charles." "He turned around and said, "Another thing that troubles me is, with his grand scale to impress certain chiefs.
"Lieutenant Burton, be pleased to inform these gentlemen that I propose to form these men into a line, then to break into columns by the right and to form square on the center battalion," and so on, for about five minutes, in military technical terms for which there were no equivalents in these men's dialect. "Yes, sir," said Richard, saluting. Turning to the chiefs, Richard said, "Oh, chiefs, our great man is going to show you the way we fight, and you must attend to him very closely."
