REMARKABLE MENTAL ENERGY AND MEMORY.

In a recent issue of your valuable paper, says a correspondent of the Scientific American, reference was made to a remarkable case of the development of the memory in a blind person. Such instances analytically considered sometimes become not only interesting and instructive, but very suggestive.

The power of the human mind in blind persons to produce and retain before itself, as if on a mental blackboard, so to speak, vast arrays of things, positions, and figures, almost as tangible and fixed, so far as being there to refer to for the time is concerned as the real blackboard before the eye of the sighted, is astonishing.

Persons to give a case which is regarded as very remarkable. Professor John A. Simpson, of Raleigh, director of music in the North Carolina institution for the education of the blind, though blind from childhood, is one of the best educated men in the State. He is a graduate of the institution he now serves, as also of Trinity College, North Carolina, from which he received regularly the degrees of A. B. and A. M., notwithstanding there were at that time, some twenty-five or more years ago, no embossed text books of any value; and hence he was compelled either to have the prescribed course of studies read to him, or to copy the books laboriously by the use of an embossed alphabet. His studies there and since were of necessity carried on largely without the help of teachers, and he thus was forced to compare one authority with another and otherwise test his own work at every step.

In this manner he has gone over the whole field of pure mathematics, from algebra to quaternions, omitting nothing and working out every problem mentally. In the same way he has mastered several ancient and modern languages, and has by his own work accumulated a very valuable manuscript library in Latin, Greek, French, German, Italian and Spanish. His life has been devoted mainly, however, to music; his task being to train his blind pupils to become teachers of the sighted, and in this he has been successful.

As pianist of a local philanthropic society, he has accompanied entire cantatas, masses, and oratorios without error and with finished precision. Once, when attending a musical festival, he was called out to the aid of an apparatus whatever, a number consisting of twenty figures by another number equally large. At another time he was called upon to memorize the whole of Milton's "Paradise Lost." He has frequently read very difficult pieces of music while sitting at the bedside and then going to the piano and performing them without having any notes. He can readily detect, locate, and rectify any ordinary defect in a pipe organ; take the largest and most complicated of them to pieces, repair their most delicate parts, and tune them to exactness; and he is frequently called upon to do such work in the city.

OVERLOOKING THE CITIES.

The tendency in these days and the meaning.

The closing decades of this century are witnessing no more remarkable phenomenon than that shown in the migration of population, not so much from country to country, as from place to place in the same country. This interior migration is most noticeable in the most progressive lands. In Australia, for example, the rural districts prosper and a few great cities grow enormously, while all the intermediate communities are relatively stagnant; but in the United States the drift is unmistakably from the farms to the nearest village, from the village to the town, and from the town to the city. The newest portions of the Western States, which are still in process of settlement, have not as yet felt the full effect of the centrifugal attraction, for the population tends to spread out in a more or less uniform density; but wherever immigration has ceased the new forces quickly begin to tell, and throughout the older settled states, in New York as well as in Illinois and Iowa, a uniform and all-powerful current has set in, sweeping everything toward the center. This transmigration has most far-reaching effects. Politically, it transfers a preponderance of power to the great cities, changing the results in important elections, and increasing the urgency of municipal problems. Socially, it swells the number of the classes that are exposed to agitation and discontent, intensifies the dangers to be apprehended from social upheavals, and widens the growing chasm between the classes. It concentrates the wealth of the nation into fewer hands, and reacts profoundly upon the material, social and political life of the entire nation. The importance of this migration, therefore, is hardly to be overestimated. It is a striking characteristic of our period—that it is a period of universal transition, in which large masses of people are moving against their own interests, leave the country, where homes are cheap, the air pure, all men equal and extreme poverty unknown, and crowd into cities where all these conditions are reversed. When this movement has proceeded too fast, and the cities have become swollen with a surplus population for whom there is no room, when the expansion of the country has far outrun the growth of the contributory territory, and this condition has become excessive and universal, a panic interrupts this concentration of population, and the proper balance between town and country is re-established. The more rapid, therefore, the process of centralization, the more frequent and intense must be the periods of depression needed to correct it.—Henry J. Fletcher, in Forum.

In the Industries.

An old colored "uncle" applied to a druggist in Buffalo for some whiskey, not because he needed it, but because he wanted it.

"We can't let you have it, uncle, except for medicinal or mechanical purposes. You are not sick, are you?"

It was a powerful temptation, but the old man overcame it.

"No, sah," he said weakly.

"And you don't need it for medicinal purposes?"

"What's dem, sah?"

"Oh, well, for manufacturing or other industries!"

"Dat's it, sah—dat's it!" exclaimed the old fellow, "de new big centeny. 'De boss done tol' me I had to be no induschiour or he wa'n't gwinter hab me rou'n' no longer, sah, an' I spec' you better lemme hab a little whiskey to order an' let me my 'fink. 'Hout er tablespoonful, sah, to each 'fink'd do fer to-day, sah!"

Misses: "I don't want you to leave so much company. You have more callers in a day than I have in a week!" Domestic: "Well madame, perhaps if you'd try to be a little more agreeable you'd have as many friends as I have."

AN ANTELOPE HORSE.

He was trained for the Sport and knew the Fine Points.

"I had a horse," said an old army man "that had belonged once to the Seventh Cavalry, but he had the 'C.' brand under his mane, so he was out of the service, inspected and condemned. He was a regular old plug, but he was all I could get to go hunting on, so I took him. I rode way out into the plains from the fort, and I saw a bunch of antelope finally. I got off the horse, and dropped the reins on the ground, expecting the horse to stand there until I came back. I started off toward the antelope, and was sneaking along to get a shot, when I looked around, and I'll be blamed if that brute of a horse hadn't started off as tight as he could lope.

"Well, says I, 'I guess I'm in for a six mile tramp home.' I cursed that horse to myself for awhile, and then I went on. I frayed my neck, and I'm blessed if there wasn't that horse over the other side of that bunch of antelope. Well now, says I, 'I'd like to know what the devil that horse thinks he's up to, anyhow.' Pretty soon he began to circle around on the other side, and the antelope saw him, and started off toward me. I caught on at once, and I lay down and waited. The old horse cut up the most surprising antics out there, and all the while he kept working those antelopes toward me. By and by they got in range, and I got two, darned good luck it was, too. You see, that horse was an old Indian hunting pony, and he had been trained to do that way. Well, I went back to the post, and everybody wanted to know how I happened to get such good luck. But I didn't tell them.

"A few days after I took that same horse out after prairie chickens. It was the line of the year when the chickens were flying, and I was riding along, when all of a sudden the critter stopped short, bracing himself up and waited for what I thought was a long time. I saw a couple of chickens fly up ahead of me, and was so surprised I didn't shoot. 'Well, I says, I'll be switched. Here's a horse that's not only a hunting horse, but is a regular hunter, too. And he was. I got my gun ready, and the next time he stopped I was right on hand, dropped a bird. Well, no sooner did the bird fall than he galloped right off to where he fell, and all I had to do was to reach off and pick it up. He was a great horse, I tell you, and got lots of good hunting with him."—Denver Field and Farm.

THE AUTHOR OF "DIXIE."

The Mount Vernon (O.) Correspondence of the New York Journal says: It is probably not known to many that Dan Emmett, who was the undoubted originator of the present form of minstrelsy, is still living and a resident of this place. He is over 80, but he looks 20 years younger.

In 1850 Emmett wrote the song of "Dixie." It sprang into popularity at once, and before Bryant's Minstrels had sung the song a week all New York was whistling it. The whole country took it up, and today it is better known than the national anthem. The melody and words appealed strongly to the people of the slave States.

At the beginning of the Civil War it became the popular song of the South. Emmett's musical and literary achievements are many. He is the author of "Dixie" than all of his other achievements combined and never tires of telling the circumstances that led to its composition.

"Dixie" is the song of songs in the South today. No gathering where there is music is ever held without "Dixie" is heard. It was the song of the Southern soldiers during the war, and from the beginning of the war it was sung in the camps of the boys in blue. The words have no political significance.

Later in the war the song had become so strongly identified with the Confederates that the Federal troops finally tabooed it. Gen. T. B. Gordon lectured here in Mount Vernon last winter. He called upon Emmett at his humble home, took him to the hotel and spent an entire afternoon with him.

Emmett has a comfortable income from the sale of "Dixie." He charges $5 for an exact copy and the famous song. He still retains the original manuscript, and no money could buy it.

Shine's Lights at Sea.

When you face toward a ship's bow the side at your right hand is called the starboard side and the side at your left hand is called the port side. On her starboard side a ship carries at night a green light, and it is so shut in by two sides of a box that it cannot be seen from the port side or from behind. On her port side she carries a red light, and it is so shut in that it cannot be seen from the starboard side or from behind. If the ship is a steamship she carries a big white light at her foremost-head, but if she is a sailing vessel she does not. This white masthead light can be seen from all around except from behind. It is for the red and green lights that the officer of the deck most intently watches, for by them he can tell which way the vessel is going. If her red light shows, he knows that her port side is toward him and she is crossing to his left; if it is her green light he knows she is crossing toward him, and she is crossing to his right; but if both red and green are showing she is heading straight in his direction. Thus the learns by the running lights where the other vessel is, what she is, and in what direction she is going; and he knows in plenty of time whether she is on his track or whether she is crossing it in one direction or the other. All that is not enough, however, to avoid collision; for both he and the officer on the other vessel must know what to do, and what the other is going to do. He must know, so to speak, just what track to switch and on just what track the other vessel will switch to avoid him. This is settled by set rules, which are the same all over the world, and are known to all men who follow the sea.

BALTIMORE CITY LIGHTNING ROD WORKS.

J. A. RUTH, Patentee and Inventor of the NON-OBJECTIVE CURRENT TUBULAR COPPER LIGHTNING ROD, which is the most perfect and safe Lightning Rod in the world.

—MUNSON ROD AND OTHER RODS.—

This celebrated Lightning Rod, owing to the material of which it is made and the manner of its construction, is the most complete protection against disaster by lightning ever invented. This fact has been proven by a practical test, which has been made in the presence of a large number of witnesses, and has been in constant use, being erected upon many thousands of private and public buildings, in all sections of the country; and although there have fallen upon it, in many instances, most terrific discharges of electricity, yet in no instance has it failed to conduct it harmlessly to the earth, thus saving many lives and property of almost incalculable value.

It has never failed.
