TRAINING CARRIER PIGEONS.

How They Are Taught to Act as Reliable Message Bearers.

Do Witt C. LeBlanc writes an account of the "Carrier Pigeons of Santa Catalina," describing the rapid mail service established between two places, in St. Nicholas. He says:

It must be understood, however, that in certain pigeons, especially those known as the Belgian variety, the homing instinct is developed in a remarkable degree, and it is the bird's intense love of home and the almost unvarying certainty of their return thither after having been taken some distance away and then released which make them valuable as carriers.

The methods used in training a pigeon for special service are not by any means similar, as many persons seem to think, to those used in teaching a dog to run after a stick, or a white spotted pony to dance the polka. A carrier's education consists in conveying him away from home, setting him free, and watching him fly back to the loft where he belongs.

This sounds almost as thrilling as the story of the enterprising mouse that first ran the clock, and then was used to carry and of course it conveys no idea of the immense amount of care and patience involved in the rearing and breeding of the birds—the special cultivation of those qualities which produce the best results, and so on.

In training the birds for Catalina three or four months are usually required in a pastboard box, perforated with holes about the size of a quarter of a dollar. They were carried to a spot a mile or so from the loft, in a direct line for the coast and Catalina, and released. A few days later the same birds were taken a greater distance away—say three or four miles from home—by placing together in a pastboard box, perforated with holes, the several succeeding journeys were gradually lengthened until San Pedro, the seaport of Los Angeles, 23 miles distant, was reached.

Then the pigeons were taken aboard the steamer and set at liberty a few miles out at sea, increasing the distance upon the four occasions that followed, until at last the end of the route was reached, and the birds would fly, without fail, across the sea and over the land to their home.

WINE DRINKERS' MAXIMS.

Sayings of Our Elders and a Contribution From Theodor Roosevelt.

Joseph remarks, felicitously toasts and cheerily greeted his long profane philo-sophical truths are to be sought usually among those who continuously find solace in wine drinking. But there is some literature on this subject, and in fact, there is an admirer of wit and sagacity. "A cellar without wine, a home without woman and a purse without money are the three greatest evils of the world," says one of the wisest and best known of the wine drinkers. "Red wine poisons systems," is another. "Wine is a turn-out—first a friend, then an enemy," is a third. "Burgundy is an old saying, 'is the wine of princes, Sillery of nobles, claret of the gentle born and beer of the common people.' It seems to be a fair inference that the wine drinkers go to the trouble of compiling in various works the apothegms of wine drinkers have chosen them as a good cultivator of the art of drinking, and in fact, care—and when the author of such remarks does not drink, 'Champagne,' it is a wine drinker's saying, 'is like criticism—more excellent if good.' 'Love is the other,' 'stole its purple light from the wine cup.' Here is another, 'The bottle of the wine is treated like a gentleman, 'Drink your enemy's wine, it is as good as your friend's,' is an inhospitable but not unphilosophic saying, and, 'remember,' says another, 'olives and wine tell what a man is.'

One recent saying of a wine drinker does not find a place in the collected maxims heretofore published, but later it may. Theodore Roosevelt, in a speech, declared at a dinner a few years ago, "There is not one idea in a keg of beer."—New York Sun.

HE WENT ON WALL STREET.

The Lamb's Experience There Gave Him Valuable Notes.

At the corner of Broadway and Wall street a man accosted me the other day with an inquiry for the nearest police station, and of course I asked him what was the matter. He was much rather than a mad and not a bit excited as he answered: "Well, I guess I don't want the police station after all, though somebody ought to be arrested. I was down there for about two hours ago thinkin' I'd speculate. 'I've heard and read of Wall Street so much that I thought I'd try my luck.' " "And you went down there?" "Yes, and I lost my money." "I was down there for about two hours ago thinkin' I'd speculate. 'I've heard and read of Wall Street so much that I thought I'd try my luck.' " "And you went down there?" "Yes, and I lost my money."

"Young man, kin you tell me what I kin put up $10 on the wheat market?" "I can't tell you, but I'll give you my money and I'll buy you a thousand bushels." "I gin him the money, and we stood around for awhile, and then went into a place to look at what they call a ticker. Arter he'd looked the young man says: "Ole man, she's broke five pints, and you are closed out. She's sure to turn, though, and you'd better put up another five."

"And did you?" I asked. "Well, yes, I put up another five, and she went down, and I cleared $3. Then she went down, and I lost the thing. Then I got kinder excited and put up $15 all at once. In about five minutes the young man said if Chicago kept out of the wheat I'd make a cent. 'Five' and I lost my $15."

"And then you quit?" "Well, yes—that is, the young feller asked if I had any more money to hull the market with, and when I said no he did the quittin'. I was lookin' around for him when a man told me I'd kin swindlin' 'em. I was mad 'nuff to beat at fist, but I guess I won't do nothin' about it. I've seen Wall Street. The lamb has met the lion, and he's lost his money."

"But the experience will be valuable to you." "Yes, you will. Jest about the time I realized I'd lost the feller cum along and asked me where Broadway was, and I hauled off and knocked him head over heels down a basement! You bet they don't kin swindlin' no more in this town!"—Detroit Free Press.

Long Time Between.

The clock struck ten, I and then Feb. 15, but still she was alone. The Eskimo who slept fitfully, starting from a troubled dream every two or three weeks. "Will he never come?" Presently, however, she heard the familiar footfall. "Thought again," she groaned. "It is hardly ten years since he was drunk before." It was very late. The gray dawn was already breaking, and in less than a month it would be broad day.—Detroit Tribune.

His Heroine.

A new novel, Mr. Shepherd M. Duggar, in describing his heroine, says: "Her month was set with pearls and lined with unmetals, while her nose gracefully imparted its own radiance, and her eyes imparted a radiant glow to the azure of the sky."

MUSHROOMS.

They Do Not Come Up All at Once, Nor Do They Grow Forever.

Mushrooms do not come up all at once, nor do they grow forever. If the spawn is good and planted early in September, from five to five, and sometimes six, weeks will elapse before the first crop of mushrooms makes its appearance.

The first crop will flow for two or three weeks, and the mushrooms will then out, and a slight dressing of fresh manure, about half an inch in depth, should be spread over the bed. When this coating has been beaten down with a spade, the soil should be gently moistened with tepid water, and in a day or two a second crop of mushrooms—often better than the first—can be gathered.

The second crop of mushrooms grows in a similar manner, fresh spawn and fresh manure being used, and the same quantity of new beds if another crop of mushrooms is desired.

Grow mushrooms successfully great care must be taken to obtain a soil which can be bought in all the horticultural stores. But if the cultivator wishes to make his own spawn, he can do so by following these directions: For every portion of horse droppings, cow dung and fresh manure mix the whole thoroughly together, as you would make mortar. Then form the matter into cakes about the size of a large brick. Place these bricks on edge under cover until they become hard, dry, then insert into each brick a piece of straw half an inch square, and let the bricks remain until they are quite dry. Then spread about eight inches of horse dung over the floor of the shed, on which build the bricks in a row, leaving the side in which the spawn has been put uppermost. Then cover the pile of bricks over with sufficient stable manure so as to give a gentle heat, and during the winter, through the whole. In two or three weeks the spawn will have spread itself through the whole mass of each brick and will be ready to plant at any time during the winter.—New York Times.

CAUTION SUPERSTITIONS.

Some of the Curious Methods Adopted in Sickness and Death.

A method such in vogue at one time of ascertaining whether a sickness would prove fatal was to take a stone in the ground, one called the quick grave, and the other the dead hole. The sufferer was then placed between the two, and the hole to which he turned was indicated what would be the outcome of his malady. Sometimes a piece of rock was broken over the head of a person whose last moments were in the agonies of death, and to those who witnessed the scene, it was held that the heart of the sick man would thus be broken and his release hastened. Windows and doors are always thrown wide open, and the best death and burial lens and cats were kept carefully shut up. A person visiting these animals at such a juncture was doomed to blindness in his future life. The day just before the Bleeker street station was reached, a glance in at a window of a tenement near there showed a scene that has haunted its witness since. In what was probably the one room of a family, for bed, stove and washbasin occupied almost all of the space, sat a woman with a baby, perhaps a year old, in her lap. A man sat by the woman, old before his time and evidently dying, for each panting breath was a struggle. Over mother and child he bent a maddened man, who, urged by the doctor, with his finger at the baby's wrist. One glance told the story. The first gray of the child, the agonizing look of the mother, the doctor's pitying expression, all were photographed in a second of time from the window of that elevated car, with a distinctness that will not soon fade.—New York Times.

Theoretical Contract.

A carelessly worded theatrical contract often means a heavy loss. For instance, Florence St. John was engaged by H. J. Leslie for the opera "Dorothy." Unhappily, she was taken ill and was actually never able to play in the piece at all. The manager was compelled to advertise by the wording of the contract, which cost $200 a week for nearly 12 months. So rigidly is the letter of the agreement adhered to that an actor engaged for the Globe will refuse to play at the Globe, and an actress whose contract is worded "compleatly" will decline her part if the piece should afterward be entitled a burlesque. Their salaries, however, are to be paid while they are doing nothing, just as if they were earning them.—London Letter.

Bitterly Business.

"You air the feller that is giving the show at the opy house, ain't you?" asked the fat man with the red face. "The fat man did not look to be a pass friend, so Mr. Barnes, having seen how he pulled the insult in the word 'show,' and replied with dignity, 'I am.'"

"Well," the fat man went on, "you want to make a hit with your show, and you will say, when the feller asks you, 'What is that about what meat Caesar fed that, but I must have got fat by gettin his meat at Sprague's millinery, some butcher shop, Sprague's millinery, some butcher shop, I'll see that your trunk go at least when you leave town.'—Indianaapolis Journal.

BALTIMORE CITY LIGHTNING ROD WORKS.

J. A. RUTH, Patentee and Inventor of the NON-OBSSTRUCTIVE CURRENT TUBULAR COPPER LIGHTNING ROD, Also the Improved Triangular Ruth Tube Rod. MISERON ROD AND OTHER RODS.

This celebrated Lightning Conductor, owing to the material of which it is made and the manner of its construction, is the most complete protection against disaster by lightning ever invented. It is conclusively shown by a practical test of a great many years, during which time it has been erected upon thousands of private and public buildings, in all sections of the country; and although there have fallen upon it in numerous instances, most terrific discharges of electricity, yet in no instance has it failed to conduct them safely to the earth, thus saving many lives and property of almost incalculable value. It has never been Overcharged.
