Representative Livingston, of Ga., told a Washington reporter that the negro secret organizations of the South were seriously considering the advisability of going over to the Democratic party in a body, in hope of bettering their condition. It all depends upon what they mean by "bettering their condition," whether such a hope could be realized. The Democratic party certainly has no political inducements to offer negro recruits-that is to say offices.

In 1825, however, autocratic powers were conferred upon the Captain General, and, in 1836, although the Cuban Deputies to the Congress at Madrid had been duly elected. they were not suffered to take their seats. By the Constitution of 1837 the represen-

That is to say, while all the former Spanish possessions on the American mainland had their independence acknowledged, Cuba, the ever-faithful isle, was treated as a foreign country. The product of its people's labor was confiscated by iniquitous fiscal laws and by irregular but irresistible exactions, while those of its inhabitants who dared to proclaim their love of liberty by deed or word perished on the scaffold.

> It was the fault, not of Marshal Marlinez Campos, but of the Madrid Executive, that Spain's plighted word was broken. For seventeen years the most strenuous endeavors were made by leading Cubans and by some upright Spaniards to persuade the Madrid Government to comply with the terms of the treaty of Zanjon. It was not until the futility of all such efforts was general y recognized that the Cuban people determined to recur once more to the fundamental right of revolution. In the winter of 1894-95 a new insurrectionary organization was started, with Jose Marti as its civil head the post of Commander in-Chief being allotted to Maximo Gomez by the prin cipal officers who had fought in the ten years' war. The date fixed for the upising was Feb. 24, 1895, and the people esponded in Santiago, Santa Clara and Mantanzas. In the two last-named > provinces, however, the leaders were quickly imprisoned, and thus, for the checked. On April 1 Gen.
