THE OUTRY IN MARYLAND ABOUT "COMPENSATION."

One cannot be so surprised at the sudden and fierce opposition that has manifested itself against the new Constitution, simply on the score of its having made the State free without "compensation" for slaves; and this, more especially, when the first proposition of the President to give compensation was footed at, scooped at, and utterly out of the question—

When we remember now, that the very profusion of "compensation" was considered an "injury," it is something to find the very same people now insisting upon having it from the State, and standing in the way of the State's advancement, and so far as they can do it, in the way of the restoration of the Union and harmony.

The point made now, is—that the Convention takes away "property," disposes of it in a way that it had no right to do. Tell the disaffected that tens and hundreds of thousands of persons in the State have suffered this same infliction of a loss of property as the direct consequence of a cautious rebellion, and they will insist that somehow that was lost in a legitimate way; that it was a depreciation of property simply, without the aggravating accompaniment of a rebellion on the part of slaves; and willing to share the responsibility of bringing on a war and its attendant evils in the interests of slavery; not willing to acknowledge that the majority of the slaveholders of Maryland had unhesitatingly given the revolt their best wishes, and more, their substantial aid, they assume and insist that they are not to blame; and that consequently they should bear no part of the penalty. They would not only make their loyal fellow-citizens bear their own burdens of taxation, depreciation of property, the risk of life and limb in fighting to sustain the Government and defend their own homes, but they would call upon them to further suffer by paying a good price for an interest which was absolutely destroyed by the first gun fired at Fort Sumter. They are like the man who had his dog killed by a neighbor and brought suit for his value. Inquired of by the neighbor as to the value of the dog, he replied, "I don't know, but I'll give you $100." "Oh, the cursed dog was worth nothing! But since he was mean enough to kill him, he shall pay the full value of him." Or to render the case aright, slavery has been of no value since the war, but since the Convention was mean enough to give it the finishing blow, they should pay the full value of it. Let us see.

All remember the famous arraignment, some two years ago, of the slaves of the Carroll estate, and that, too, by men sworn to give their best judgment in the case, they were rated at "five dollars apiece," some one hundred and thirty of them! Well, the other day the odds and ends of the crockery of the same slaveowner were brought to the hammer, (he was not a crockery merchant, either), and the crockery brought one half dozen times as much again as the one hundred and thirty negroes! There's something for those who are now ready almost for a new revolt in Maryland, because the Convention has "taken away their goods." It is used to be said that the "chivalry," the aristocratic gentlemen do not care for "money"; they left that to the regards of traders, and went to the fighting as freely for the "Almighty dollar," for the exploded interest in a dead institution, as if that was the very embodiment of Southern "rights." Perhaps it is. At any rate, let them stop their clamor about "greed for copper," hereafter on the part of others, or acknowledge the claims of the "high toned" as put forth in the past all stuff. The world begins to understand them, if they do not yet know themselves.

THE "LITTLE NAPOLEON."

We gave a special notice recently of one of those bombastic addresses of McClellan in Western Virginia, based in style upon the early attempts of the old Napoleon, and intended to make the world believe that we had a champion in "Little Mac," worthy to rival in military greatness the proudest names of the centuries past. Whilst we write, we have lying before us the copy of another of those swelling manifestos of his, and we believe the first one of the kind he put forth. It is dated at Cincinnati, and begins in the stereotyped phraseology so much in vogue with him whilst "striking an attitude" before the impudently popular. We will quote only one or two of these passages. He begins, a la Napoleon, as we have said:

"Soldiers:—You are ordered to cross the 'frontier and enter upon the soil of Virginia.'"

"... place upon the safeguard of 'your honor the persons and property of the 'Virginians. I know that you will respect their feelings and all their rights!'"

Now who does not recollect the fact, that after Little Mac obtained command of our armies, the whole rebel host patted the little man on the shoulder, and were never weary of sounding the "was the only one they feared" was "interpolated upon the records of the times, until to take their words for it, they were more afraid of him than of all the truly hard fighters of that period and on cards put together. But for all that, what did they do? Did they really flee in terror from the front of his force, did they hesitate to confront the one hundred and odd pieces of the artillery at his disposal for months, going away only when they got ready and thought proper, leaving him to ride through their empty camps, never a laurel to gather upon the occasion? O how his words "thundered in the leader," as that insupportable title, yet how lamentable the results achieved by him!

Let this nation ask pardon of all others for having allowed itself to be so miserably deceived, so wretchedly duped. Of course the Virginians liked him—all their rights!—not to punish them for the horrors and crimes they had inaugurated.

A MISTAKE AS TO MILITARY MOVEMENTS, SOUTH.

The rebel movements in the neighborhood of Athens, Alabama, are spoken of in the papers as "movements upon Sherman's rear," a very questionable way of stating the case, as any one may see by examining a good map of the line of Sherman's communications with Nashville. The road from Atlanta has a general bearing to the Southeast, not exactly at right angles to Athens, Alabama, but placing the latter place at about one hundred miles directly south of Nashville, and consequently at that distance from Sherman's railroad communication. Wheeler was reported as driven past that point—Athens—by Reussens, the town being captured by the latter, and now we have a later account from that region, by which it seems the rebel Forrest has taken Athens and advanced on the line toward Nashville, being checked at Palaski, seventy miles distant from the former place, and still distant to that extent from the Chattanooga road.

This view of the situation will go far to relieve any anxiety of late entertained, as to the chances of breaking up the line of road from Nashville to Chattanooga.

GREAT UNION MASS MEETING IN NEW YORK.

An immense and enthusiastic mass meeting of the friends of Lincoln and Johnson and the Union, was held at the Cooper Institute, New York, on Tuesday evening. A number of distinguished speakers were present, among whom was ex-Pastor General Blair, who delivered a powerful speech on the occasion. We regret that our space compels us to give only his introductory remarks, which allude more particularly to a recent event. Mr. Blair said:

"I had ever doubted that my heart had dictated to me the right course in my public conduct, I should still feel here tonight, after reading the response you have given to the favorable remarks which have fallen from your chairman, that I had not mistaken the popular heart in believing that the people of the Union had my whole heart, and compared with that cause, no man has any share in my consideration at this hour."

Rev. Dr. Todd, of Pittsfield, Mass., has just met the Christian Commission the sum of $8,341.30, which was raised in Berkshire through his influence and labors. About $500 of it was given by the operatives in the factories in Pittsfield, to the amount of $1,356.00 are the proceeds of a children's fair.

The New Nation, Fremont paper, now advocates the election of Mr. Lincoln. The Baltimore platform is rejected upon the national principles, while the Chicago platform is retained. The editor charges that the country by advocating the election of the candidate of the Baltimore platform.

Gen. Sheridan has just gained a glorious victory over the rebels, and the leading Atlantic journal in this city this morning prints an article headed "Lincoln's mismanagement of the war."

The second edition of Tennyson's "Ravens" is announced as London. The numbers called for on this occasion by the trade will not be short of fifteen thousand copies.
