BY W. H. HAYWARD. With stricken heart, with sad and serious brow, To God's decies submissive let us bow. The good, the noble livener is no more! We mourn his loss-nis death we all deplore. At home, abroad, in the church he brightly

In private best his genial traits were known; Governed by heavenly and by certhly laws, A friend to every meritorious cause. Firm, true and faithful to life's sudden and. The poor and suffering found in him a friend, In Sabbath school, in class, at death's bed-side, A spiritual teacher, comforter and guide. Zealous for good he isbored right and day, Sentle and modest in his quiet way: His duty to his fellow men he understood. And never wearied in doing good. But cruel Death his shaft at him did wield. Though armed with truth, his panoply and shield.

"Shall we sing in heaven forever?" Sweet the The voice to memory dear can never die. Will now be tuned in praise to God most high! On his death-bed melodies sweet and clear, He sang of heaven and his country, themes to him

The summons came, it sounded from the skies.

The honest man, the Christian father dies!

There he will chant his favorite hymn again

Next to God's glory, of his flag he loved to sing. The last sad tribute his loyal heart could bring. Lay him gently down in his narrow bid. Our brother eleepeth, ch! he is not dead. Transplanted to the joys of heaven above, Where partings cease, where all is peace and Bear not a menument above his grave. But let our flag half-masted o'er him wave; On countless hearts engraven be his name, Whilst the Union record will his fame proclaim Perce to his ashes; consign dust to dust. God's will be done, in whom he placed his trust. He smote our friend, we bow and kiss the rod: He is now with angels singing praise to God.
