STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Roweville is a row of seven cottages built as miners' dwellings by the United Big Vein Coal Company early in the 1910's. The village was named for the Rowe brothers of Frostburg who operated the company. The United Big Vein Coal Company's mines were located on a portion of the Joseph A. Trimble estate to the west of the village. (interview)

These cottages are an unusual style of company supplied housing in the Maryland coal region where the typical company houses were two story and/or duplex dwellings.
