The Beener House is located at the eastern end of Bartlett Cemetery near Moscow. The frame, two-story, three bay by one bay house is based on the ell-plan. The facade faces southeast. A two-story frame addition abuts the northwest elevation of the ell.

The framehouse is covered with weatherboards and asbestos shingle siding. It rests on a high random ashlar stone foundation. The hipped roof is covered with asphalt shingles. A hip roofed porch on the facade has turned posts with decoratively scrolled brackets. Other decorative elements of the porch include jigsawn gingerbread along the roof line and a jigsawn slatboard balustrade. Windows of the first floor on the facade and southwestern elevation are tall and pegged 2/2 sash. Other windows are 1/1 sash. An entrance in the center of the facade includes a two light transom and a door of one light with five rectangular panels below it and three square panels above. An entrance on the northeastern elevation is sheltered by a simply bracketed hipped hood and has a door of twelve lights and one panel. An exterior cinderblock chimney is on the southwestern elevation.
