DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Ford well house is located on the south side of Ford Road in Shady Side. A hedge shields the house from the road and the lawn in back of the house slopes down to Parrish Creek and the Shady Side Boat Yard. The dwelling, which faces north, has several large cedar trees around it.

The structure is a story-and -a-half, three bays wide and one room deep, weatherboard dwelling on a low brick foundation. A one story kitchen joins the west elevation. The north elevation is used as the main entrance now, although the original entrance probably faced the water. Considered to be the oldest house in Shady Side, the dwelling has a gable roof of medium to steep pitch and exterior chimneys on the gable ends; the west chimney rises between the main block and kitchen wing. Gabled dormers are on the front and rear slopes of the roof. Several weatherboard additions are connected to the house. There is a one story shed on the west wall of the kitchen, an enclosed porch with a shed roof extending across the south (rear) elevation, and perpendicular to the porch a one story addition on a brick foundation extends south from the east elevation. The latter addition was perhaps built as a summer kitchen.

The fenestration of the principal facade is irregular. The main entrance, with a window on either side of it, occurs west of the center of the facade. The first story windows, having 6/6 light, double hung sash are close to the ends of the house. However, the east dormer is directly above the doorway. The windows and doors are flanked by board shutters with half moon designs.

Behind the house is a square, one story weatherboard outbuilding - probably a diary - covered with a curved pyramidal roof which has a rectangular cupola with ventilators and a tiny shingled roof. A low brick foundation underlies the building.

The surveyor was not able to see the interior of the building.

Addendum to Ford House MHT inventory form:

The exterior walls of the main block of the house are covered with beaded weatherboard siding. Some boards have been replaced. The beaded boards are secured with double struck nails (circa 1790 - 1810).

The interior of the house has been altered; very little original or early trim survives, making it difficult to date the dwelling based on surviving interior finishings. The plan may have been a hall and parlor plan, based on the exterior fenestration. A partition wall divides the first floor of the main block. An enclosed stair, entered from the rear of the house, rises against the partition wall to the second floor. A simple square newel post and balusters, typical of the early 19th century, is located on the second floor. The roof was not accessible from inside, so rafter connections and nails were not examined. A partial basement was accessible. The joists are hewn. One joist which runs from the front of the house to the rear (as do the others), is massive and appears to have been reused.

Based on the architectural evidence examined, the Ford House was built in circa 1800.
