ADDITIONAL ARCHITECTURAL OR STRUCTURAL DESCRIPTION:

AA-670

Thought to have initially been a one-story brick gambrel dwelling, raised to two stories, with hyphens added at that time (mid 18thC.) Two and one-half story addition added mid 19thC. and a two story porch added to front late 19thC. Original design obscured by additions. Good cast iron columns at later porch; Palladian window in wing which also has shed dormers; main block with simple cornice that continues across later porch, which is pedimented. Good later balustrade at top of hipped roof main block.

The Bordley-Randall House is one of Annapolis early and historic structures, however, it is also one of the most altered. The original one storey brick house, probably with a gambrel roof, erected before 1718 by the Bordley family is changed almost beyond recognition. During the 18th C. the roof was raised a full 2 1/2 storeys, and wings with hyphens put on. In the 19th C. the Randall family erected a 2 1/2 storey structure against the main block. A captain's walk was added and the west wing was enlarged to a full - sized residence for the use of Miss Kate Randall. In the late 19th C. a cumbersome 2 storey porch was erected on the front of the building. Mr. Halsey while a professor at St. John's College introduced a quantity of carved Adam-style mantels and woodwork". (H.A.B.S.)
