Bosley Methodist Church
Southwest side of Thornton Mill Road
Accessible - Restricted
Date: 1875-1900

The Bosley Church, dating from 1877 is an excellent example of American Gothic-revival ecclesiastical architecture. It is a stone church five bays in length, each marked by stone buttresses and a tall slim pointed arch window. The original church was built on land donated by Thomas Bosley. The Bosley church was built by Jacob Vance on stone quarried on the Bosley land. The carpenters were A. Hynson and S. Keeseey from Pennsylvania and to whom windows in the main entrance were donated. The congregation included members of such prominent families as the Bosleys, Coles, Bacons, Pearces, Chilcoats and Ensors.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Dating from 1877 the Bosley Church is a Gothic-revival stone church five bays in length, each marked by stone buttresses and a tall slim pointed-arch window. The principal entrance is in the east end, facing the road, and above it on the steeply-pitched gable roof is a wooden belfry, its bellhouse defined by eight wooden columns with wooden tracery above, all supporting a concave pyramidal roof. Two-lancet windows flank the entrance and a Gothic tripartite window high in the gable consists of a two-lancet taller window flanked by a very narrow, somewhat shorter single lancet on each side. All openings have pointed arches. The roof, covered with slates laid in fields of alternating rectangular and "fish-scale" shapes, extends over the walls in a wide overhang, supported up the rake by pairs of scrolled brackets.

A modern stone addition stands at the west end, its form repeating that of the original church; the addition extends a short distance to the south.

Internally the church is a single room, its plastered walls and ceilings boldly stenciled in borders around windows, above wainscot, and at breaks in plain between walls and ceilings, and within the ceiling itself, which follows the several plains of the concealed roof trusses. Pews are arranged in three banks with two aisles leading to the Gothic-revival pulpit. Windows are filled with

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Bosley Methodist Church, located on the southwest side of Thornton Mill Road, is the third church erected by its members. The exact date this congregation was formed has not been established, however traditionally it resulted from a visit paid by a Virginia lay preacher, Richard Owings, sometime between 1770 and 1785. The first meetings were held at Conclusion Farm, the home of Thomas Cole. This chapel was called Cole's Meeting House and was erected in about 1800. By 1825, there was need for a larger church, so the congregation moved to a site donated by Thomas Bosley about one-half mile distant and the old meeting house was torn down.

The original church on this site was dedicated in 1826, but by the 1870's it, too, proved too small and was replaced by the present Gothic structure. The church, begun in 1874 and dedicated in 1877, was constructed by Jacob Vance of stone quarried on the Bosley land. The carpenters were A. Hyson and J.S. Keesey, both from Pennsylvania, and both of whom donated windows which flank the main entrance. Much of the labor was performed by the members themselves. The bell was cast in the McShane bell foundry in Baltimore and the cost of the entire building, with its furnishings, was about $8,000.

painted and stenciled glass in simple geometric shapes. A small vestibule, in width corresponding to the middle bank of pews, contains a very tall door in its west wall, behind which is the bell rope and a wooden ladder to the attic, all within the thickness of the vestibule partition.

The church is surrounded on the south and west by a cemetery which also extends across Thornton Mill Road.
