A rather typical vintage structure of the schoolhouse genre the first public school in Lutherville now extensively remodeled appears to have been three bays long with two windows flanking a central doorway at the front, low, gabled facade, which has a shed roofed, one story porch supported on round section Tuscan columns. The addition of modern siding, porch screening and chimney provide a thin veneer over the older structure.

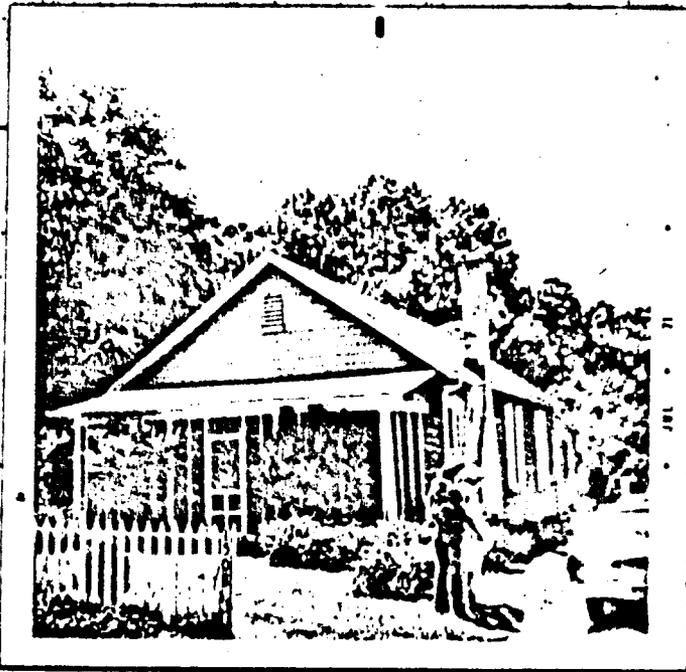

The interiors are subdivided for modern residential use, though the high ceilings recall the earlier use.
