Mallonee School

4408 Mt. Carmel Road

Hampstead, Baltimore County

Circa 1865

Private

The Mallonee School is located in the historic village of Armacost and is associated with the town of Hampstead in the Fifth District of Baltimore County. Armacost started out as a crossroads community in the last half of the 19th century when after the turn of the 20th century it gained the name Armacost. According to the 1915 atlas it was served by a school, and had a sawmill to the east. The Fifth District is located in the northwest corner of Baltimore County and is historically known for its abundant waterpower and timber that spurred construction of sawmills, paper mills, and flour mills, making this an industrial region of the county. Located along Mt. Carmel Road, this school was constructed circa 1865. Although an exact date of construction for the school has not been determined, historic maps and architectural evidence support a circa 1865 date. The school is denoted (without a specific name) on the 1877 Hopkins Atlas and the 1915 Bromley Atlas.

The Mallonee Schoolhouse is located on a rural grassy lot slightly sloping surrounded by several mature trees and shrubs with a gravel driveway leading to the house. A chain link fence lines the front yard and a rock wall connects the rear of the house to the separate garage. The school, now a single dwelling, rests on a solid coursed stone foundation and is one-and-a-half stories in height and three bays wide. The original German weatherboard siding is covered with simulated brick asphalt shingle siding. A one-story wrap-around porch supported with replacement square wood posts is seen on the facade. The side elevation of the porch features six 4-light wood awning windows. The façade is pierced with two 2/2 double-hung wood sash windows and two 1/1 double-hung vinyl sash windows. There are two replacement single-leaf wood paneled-with-fanlight doors on the façade. Rising above the front gable roof is one exterior-end capped brick chimney. There are two historic outbuildings associated with this property, a garage and shed.
