DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
The Nelson House is a three storey house of frame construction, five bays fronting south with a rear wing of contemporaneous construction behind the west end, two storeys in height, two bays in length, also of frame construction. All roofs are gabled, with interior end chimneys at each of the three gables. A one storey shed-roofed porch, with columns of the Tuscan order, extends across the principal front, and a small, simple shed-roofed porch shelters the west side of the rear wing. All exterior walls are covered with asbestos shingles. First and second storey windows are 6/6, third storey windows are 3/3, and all have louvred blinds. The principal entrance is centered on the south front, and has sidelights and a transom. The principal stair rises, with landings, to the third floor, in the centered hall. Its round walnut rail is supported by a large, turned walnut newel, and turned balusters. Applied scrolls ornament the steps. In each of the single rooms which flank the hall is a fireplace with a mantel of plain pilasters supporting a flat-arched frieze. A modern fireplace is in the rear wing. Chimneys at upper storeys are single flues for stoves. Architraves are traditionally formed with a broad cyma backband, of a 19th century profile; doors are of four raised but unmoulded panels. The stone walled cellar extends under the front section of the house only. First floor framing is a combination of straight and circular sawn dimensional lumber. Family tradition, and all visible evidence, suggests the house was built early in the second half of the 19th century. A log house with a stone chimney, traditionally the earlier house, is remembered, but it has disappeared. It stood some distance away, toward the southwest. Close to the northwest corner of the rear wing is a stone summer kitchen of 1½ storeys, one long bay in length, with its gabled roof facing south. Its entrance is centered on the south end, and one 6/6 window is on each side wall. A fireplace is in the north end, beside which an enclosed stair winds to the second floor. James T. Wollon, Jr.
