DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The principal dwelling on Manor View Farm is a two storey, three bay house of frame construction, with a two storey shed roofed rear (or east) extension, behind which is another addition of two bays; these sections all appear in photographs of the house taken prior to 1909, when a major addition was added to the south end. The 1909 addition's entire west front is a wide bay window, extending the full two storeys, but the gabled attic storey extends forward to the west face, cantilevering over the short diagonal walls below.

The entire house has been much modernized and refinished inside and out. In the original sections, windows were 6/6 with louvred blinds; the principal entrance was (and is) in its southerly bay. The two bay, two storey easterly wing is said to have been several steps below the front sections, but it was raised so all first floors are at the same elevation. The south addition has 2/2 windows, with an applied jig-sawn decoration on the head trim. A small jig-sawn fret decorates the bottom of the cantilevered gable, and the attic window trim defines a Gothic shape, with applied decoration in the blind arch above the small rectangular window. A beaded barge board remains on the south side of the shed roofed east addition.

Inside, a wide stair hall is beyond the principal entrance, with a wide stair rising to the second floor. The walnut rail is supported by a large, turned walnut newel and turned balusters. The single room north of the hall has a fireplace on its north side, with a closet filling the space to its west. The mantel is now of modern brick; the previous mantel was of painted slate. The shed-roofed addition to the rear was two rooms, now opened as one. Original doors are of six raised but un moulded panels, and openings were trimmed with a two-plain architrave with a Greek echinus backband. A massive door of eight panels -- four small square panels above the lock rail, with two vertical panels below -- with applied mouldings, is apparently out of context, near the head of the stair in the second storey; it was probably the original front door. The stone walled cellar extends under the hall, the room on its north, and under the southerly portion of the shed-roofed addition to the rear. First floor joists are of logs, Early lathing, some of which is exposed in the attic, is split, fastened with cut nails.

Architraves in the south addition have corner blocks; doors have four panels. Finishes are generally very simple.

The easterly wing was not accessible, but it is said to have been the old kitchen.

Remaining portions of original work suggest that the hall and the room to its north, and possibly all or part of the shed-roofed addition, date from ca. 1840-1850.

South of the house is an early 20th century concrete block garage. Fields of the walls are of rock faced block; corners are of smooth block with beveled edges, as in classical rusticated quoins.

James T. Wollon, Jr.
