Located at 434 Church Road, Baltimore County, this two-story frame dwelling has an "L" shaped configuration with an intersecting gable roof. Dating from the turn of the twentieth century, the vernacular dwelling is typical for the Owings-Mills/Reisterstown areas. A stone and concrete foundation supports the shingled dwelling. Modern outbuildings such as a metal tool shed and a trailer are situated to the south of the dwelling. Located on the north side of Church Road, the building has a deep setback to accommodate steep slopes. Due to its common architectural features, the building does not display distinctive characteristics of type, period or method of construction. The surrounding neighborhood is a conglomeration of modern and other older vernacular dwellings. It also does not appear to be a component of a historic district because of the considerable infill construction from the 1960s-90s. This office concurred with the consultant's determination that the Schock property was not eligible for the National Register.

Red Run Boulevard will only impact the setting of the property.

434 Church Road
Schock House
Reisterstown vicinity
Baltimore County, Maryland
Private

Ca. 1877

This frame, single-pile structure with ell has a gable roof and rises two stories. The structure has a concrete and stone foundation. The basement has an outside cellar entry. The north wing of the house, which has the stone foundation, was apparently entered from the south originally, as evidenced by a filled-in door on that side. The wall would have had a three-bay facade, with two windows flanking the door. A small, shed-roof porch has been added on the south side of the house. The porch is screened and fills the space between the two wings of the house. A raised platform or deck with shed-roof overhang is attached on the gable end of the north wing. Entry doors are present on both of the porches. Outbuildings include a gabled concrete block structure with two open storage areas on each side, an equipment shed, a metal storage shed, and a dog house. The property at 434 Church Road was, in the early nineteenth century, part of a larger tract known as Soldier's Delight. In 1877, the property was sold to Peter and Christina Korman. The property then contained approximately 11 acres, and the house was probably built by the Kormans. The house is a typical vernacular residence in the Owings-Mills-Reisterstown project area. Its apparent original orientation and entry door to the south has been altered, and the addition of porches has changed the north and west facades of the house. The house is not unusual architecturally or historically.

434 Church Road, Baltimore County, Maryland

7. Description

This frame, single-pile structure with ell has a gable roof and rises two stories. The house walls are covered with wood shingles painted white, and the roof is sheathed with green asphalt shingles. The structure has a concrete and stone foundation. The basement has an outside cellar entry. Windows are principally the double-hung sash type with 6/6 and 2/2 lights.

The north wing of the house, which has the stone foundation, was apparently entered from the south originally, as evidenced by a filled-in door on that side. The wall would have had a three-bay facade, with two windows flanking the door.

A small, shed-roof porch has been added on the south side of the house. The porch is screened and fills the space between the two wings of the house. A raised platform or deck with shed-roof overhang is attached on the gable end of the north wing. Entry doors are present on both of the porches.

There are several outbuildings and a trailer to the south of the house. They include a gabled concrete block structure with two open storage areas on each side, an equipment shed, a metal storage shed, and a dog house.

The house is situated on a rise on the north side of Church Road, east of where the road intersects with Cherry Hill Road. The area has a steep slope toward the south, where it is heavily shaded with evergreen and deciduous trees. To the south is a garden plot and to the east, the land is in open fields.

8. Significance

The property at 434 Church Road was, in the early nineteenth century, part of a larger tract known as Soldier's Delight. Tract A, the smaller of the two tracts, contained approximately five acres and was sold by Austin Choate; Tract B contained 125 acres and was sold by Richard Choate. Both were conveyed to David Lowe in 1812. In 1839, part of the parcel was conveyed by Lowe's will to Herod Choate, with whom the property remained until 1870, when it was acquired by David L. Choate. Choate ownership ended that same year, however, as David L. Choate immediately conveyed the land to J. Dickson O'Dell. O'Dell kept the property for seven years until 1877, when he sold it to Peter and Christina Korman. The property then contained approximately 11 acres, and the house was probably built by the Kormans. The 1880 agricultural census lists Peter Korman as owning a total of 11 acres, one of which was in "woodland." No agricultural production was listed, and the land was valued at $600.

The house at 434 Church Road does not appear on historic maps from 1850 (Sidney) and 1877 (Hopkins). On the 1898 Bromley map, a "P. Corman" is shown in the vicinity of the structure, but no structure can be detected on the map. The property remained in the Korman family until 1929, when it was conveyed to William A. and Katherine B. Fuld. The tract changed hands again in 1946 to Walter and Lucille Aler, and was acquired by its present owners, Kenneth D. and Ethel Schock, in 1948. The house also does not appear on any nineteenth century historic maps of the area.

The house at 434 Church Road is a typical vernacular residence in the Owings-Mills-Reisterstown project area. Its apparent original orientation and entry door to the south has been altered, and the addition of porches has changed the north and west facades of the house. The house is not unusual architecturally or historically and does not merit inclusion to the National Register of Historic Places under Criteria A, B, or C.
