Boonsboro Church - Zion Church
Ridgely
Public

Fourth Quarter 19th Century

The Boonsboro Church is a plain late 19th Century frame structure built originally for the White Methodist of Boonsboro. When the congregation dwindled, the Church was moved to its present site where it serves the religious needs of the Black Community. It is similar to several Methodist Churches of the period built throughout the Eastern Shore.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Boonsboro Church is located at the intersection of Central Avenue and Holsinger Lane, approximately one quarter mile south of Maryland Route 480 in Ridgely, Caroline County.

The plan of the church is L-shaped with an entrance tower in the inner angle of the L. The apse of the church has a wide gable roof with a molded wood cornice and is slightly reduced in height and width from the nave of the church. The apse is two bays long and the east gable end has a single venetian style window. The nave is three bays long with long, round arch windows in each bay and an identical cornice to the apse. On the south side of the church is the entrance tower with a hipped roof and cross at the peak. There is a double door way with a round arch transom on the east side of the tower and a round arch window on its south side. The ell addition of the church is on the south side west of the entrance tower. The church is frame and has been covered with an asbestos siding.
