DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Similar in most respects to the nearby Finley Barn (CE-301-A), the Beers Barn is a three level structure on a sloping site with rubble stone walls (dressed Quoins) on the east, north and west, with major access on the north via a heavy timber frame board and batten bridge to the upper level. The bridge crosses a dugout portion of the bank north of the north wall, giving northern access to the middle level as well. The stone wall which held the bank remains in part. Above the stone walls (which are level) is a gable roof, ridge running east-west, with board and batten gable ends. The barn is extended from the stone walls on the south by a heavy timber board and batten extension, with a shed roof to the main gable. The extension rests on large rough hewn beams and half-sawn logs supported on heavy wooden sawn posts, leaving an open space below the lower barn floor, or a mow. The structure was further enlarged in the 1940's by two board and batten additions: a three-level extension from the north wall with a gable roof (east-west); and a one story extension to the mow (making the mow into an enclosed lower level room) on the south, with a north-south gable roof.

There is a stone plaque on the east wall with the date 1826 inscribed.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This barn is connected by proximity to the Beers House (CE-300) and two outbuildings of significant age. Most of the land in the vicinity was owned for much of the 19th century by the Finley family, including the farm, houses and barn just west of Big Elk Creek, across the covered bridge, from the Beers barn (CE-301). The Finley and Beers barns are nearly identical, (with the exception of extra additions to the Beers barn) sufficiently so as to conjecture comparable dates, builders, and perhaps owners. Barns of more than 100 years of age are rare in Maryland, and documented dates (in this case, by the stone plaque with the inscribed 1826) are difficult to find. These two barns are probably among the oldest extant in the state. (cf. Finley Barn, CE-301-A)
