DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Adjoining the bank property is an early frame townhouse constructed upon a granite foundation. It is typical of early townhouses and resembles Mrs. Sharpless' house on the adjoining block, except it is larger scale. It is three bays long, two and one-half stories tall and two bays deep, covered with olive green asbestos siding and asphalt roofing. The windows have no shutters and the sash has been replaced with 1/1 panes.

Originally, the entrance was located on the north side of the facade, but there is now a jalousie area extending around the corner and a leanto for the entrance on the north gable. The building retains its original cornice and barge boards and there are also handsome segmentally arched roofed dormers with pilasters having diamonds in the capitals. On the south side of the ridge of the roof is the chimney, which has been lowered and chimney pots installed.

Behind the building is a two story wing with outside wood steps to the second story and a leanto porch on the south side.

At the rear of the lot is a two car garage. Also in the rear of the lot is a tenant house described separately, is the Dutton-Davis Tenement.

Originally there was a cast iron porch on the first story.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Dutton House is architecturally important because it represents the first phase of residential construction in Chesapeake City and is similar to the Jewell House on George Street. These two structures on the more important buildings along with the Battersby-Bayard House of the prime growth.

Henry Brady, a prosperous merchant in early Chesapeake City, bought this property from Absalom Cropper, ship captain, in 1866. The Brady family lived here until they built the large, Victorian house on the east side of Bohemia Avenue at Second Street. In 1871, the property was sold to James Boulden, who traded property with John Banks in 1896. John Banks is remembered in Chesapeake City as the organizer and founder of the only bank in town. He deeded part of the original home lot to the bank for the granite building in 1903.

Behind the house is a tennant house described separately. This house fronts on Second Street behind the bank.
