DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Built around 1917, the present Post Office is a large two story stucco building, with hip roof covered with asbestos. On its north side, adjoining Second Street is a small wing, large enough for a door at ground level. The building facade is composed of three units which were more distinguishable at the time of its construction. At the corners of the building are brick piers extending to the cornice. On the first story, the entrance is in the center bay and there are plate glass store windows on the north. The south part of the facade has been enclosed for residential use, but formerly had store windows. On the second story is a central window composed of three units and flanking it are two pair of windows, all with one over one sash. At the ridge of the hip roof is a hip roof lantern having lights on the east and west sides.

All trim is painted moss green in contrast to the tan of the rough textured stucco or pebble dash.

The north entrance pod appears to have been a one story leanto since weatherboards on the east are cut accordingly. On the rear or east side of the structure are two leanto additions, the closest being two storys and the outside one being one story. They are both framed weatherboard structures built on a stone foundation and concrete piers respectively.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Sawtell's Drug Store is a good early twentieth century commercial building architecturally. It is the only stucco building existing, although there are other commercial buildings of the period. A photo in possession of Mrs. Joseph Savin shows the building as originally used.

This has been an important commercial site in Chesapeake City. The heirs of Kendall Cropper held the property and probably had a business of some sort on this busy corner until 1861. About this time the building became a drug store operated, by the Dunning family. Mr. Sawtell assumed the drug store after a disastrous fire destroyed the business about 1925. When prohibition was in force, alcoholic beverages were sold by prescription only and drug stores had to keep exact records so that stock sold matched prescriptions. After the fire, Mr. Sawtell built a large new store, much as it looks today. The entrance was in the center front on Bohemia Avenue and large display windows were on either side. The drug store boasted a soda fountain and sold drugs as well as candy, ice cream, post cards, etc..

Charles Tatman bought the store and apartment building in 1935 and used the building as a general grocery store with a meat market.

In recent years, the U.S. Post Office has been located here, using only part of the main floor area, the rest being an apartment with an entrance on Bohemia Avenue. The second floor is also an apartment, boasting a fine view of the Canal.

In the 1830's when the town was just beginning to grow, this was an important commercial location and now, in 1976, it remains an important corner. The bank is on the opposite corner and the post office here, convenient for patrons now, as when most of the traffic came from another direction.

The high-rise bridge over the Canal keeps casual traffic out of Chesapeake City and people who drive into town come for a purpose. Often the purpose involves banking or using the post office and it is convenient to have the two institutions on opposite corners.
