MARTIN -
 The Etherington-Major House c. 1850 and 1880 is the combination of two separate 19th century building periods. The front side hall/parlor house is three bays across by one room deep and dates from the mid 19th century. In the 1880's a slightly taller five bay by one room rear wing was attached to the north side. The house faces south and Courthouse Point Road.

The entire house rests a partial fieldstone and brick foundation with a full basement under the later section. The whole house is covered with narrow weatherboard siding and capped with a medium sloped composition tile roof. The rear addition is three feet taller than the front block so the south gable end is slightly exposed and covered with irregular wood shingles.

The symmetrically oriented facade has a two panel front door with two light transom that occupies the westernmost bay. 2/2 sash windows light the front room. Three identical windows illuminate the second floor. A small boxed cornice stretches across the base of the roof but the eaves are extended which covers the cornice.

The gable ends are basically the same with single 2/2 sash that light each floor and two four pane attic lights. An exterior brick stack has been added to the west end. The east end contains the original brick chimney with corbelled cap. The area between the top plate and roof on each end is covered with irregular wood shingles. The eaves are extended with the soffits open.

The rear addition is similarly detailed with two over two sash and plain surrounds. The eaves are also extended on the back. Two gabled 2/2 sash dormers are found on the east slope of the roof. A side entrance is found on the east wall. The second bay from the north. An off center gable end brick stack does rise to heat the kitchen and upstairs back bedrooms.

The interior of the front block is typically detailed with mid 19th century woodwork. Two panel doors with heavy ogee moldings are framed by fluted surrounds with corner blocks.

The large frame barn is totally covered with asbestos siding. The structure rests on a fieldstone foundation and is covered by corrugated tin roof. A projecting bank entrance to the second floor is found on the north side. The structural framing is a typical box frame with a diagonally braced roof. Frame wagon sheds are also found west of the barn.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Etherington-Major House provides more evidence of the widespread employment of partial "Georgian" plans for rural farmhouses. The form is fairly common throughout the county in all types of construction. The house is located on both Cecil County Historical Maps. (1858, Wm. A. Martin - 1877, J. H. Etherington)
