1903

Jackson House is one of the three dormitories of the Tome School for Boys which, with Monroe House gymnasium, formed the main quadrangle of the School.

Under Navy ownership from 1942 until 1974, the dormitory was used as quarters for students of the Naval Academy Preparatory School, with the exception of the period from 1949 to 1951. During this interval, the School was relocated to Newport, R. I. and the dormitories and other school buildings were unoccupied.

The dormitory is currently in use as part of the Susquehanna Job Corps Center.

Jackson House is a three-story stone dormitory building in Beaux-Arts neo-classical style located on the east side of the quadrangle of the Bainbridge Naval Training Center near Port Deposit, Maryland. It is now in use as part of the Susquehanna Job Corps Center.

The rectangular building has coursed ashlar granite walls with limestone quoins, string courses, lintels, and sills. The main elevation facing the quadrangle is eleven bays in width, with the three central bays dominating. A slightly projecting pedimented "pavilion" with Ionic pilasters frames the central entrance which has a broken pediment and leaded fanlight. Floral swags carved in stone decorate the flanking bays between the second and third floors. The central pediment has a scrolled oculus.

The rear elevation of Jackson House is distinguished from the other dormitories by an elaborate doorway enframingent with a "Gibbsian" surround and broken pediment. Balustraded balconies on scroll consoles flank the doorway.

Exterior changes are few. The forecourt originally had a stone balustrade which deteriorated until it had to be removed. The court surface itself has recently been replaced by Job Corps students. As in the other dormitories, steel fire escapes have been added to the ends of the building, requiring the enlargement of a window to accommodate exit doors.
